New York—Agreement between the British and Czecho-Slovak governments for the establishment of a daily air service on the London-Cologna-Prague-Budapest section of the air route from London to the east, was announced by Ales Broz, Czecho-Slovakian consul general here.

Williamson, W. Va.—Henry Ford, in a statement printed after he had inspected his coal properties in West Virginia, declared that "unless the railroads furnish us with satisfactory service, I will build the Detroit, Toledo and Irontin railroad to this section, electrify it and haul my own coal." Mines are working only two days a week because of an insufficient car supply, Mr. Ford said. He added that in event the D. T. & I. is extended from Ironton, Ohio, 80 miles from here, "we will develop the Ohio river just as we plan to develop Muscle Shoals, and use the hydro-electric power to run trains and industries.

Birmingham, Ala. — William B. Green, director of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, who has been missing from New York for 10 days, was located here and declared his absence was caused by illness.

Chicago—Police were asked to search for an Indian bride who came to Chicago from a northern Wisconsin reservation two months ago, according to Albert Phelion, the husband, who is a Chippewa Indian. She disappeared from their home and Phellon was uncertain whether love for the reservation had lured her back or some misfortune had befallen her.

DeKalb, Ill.—Three men who admit having been in the vicinity of Elburn the night of the torture murder at Geneva, who admit getting gasoline at two houses and having their gasoline tank filled at Elburn on that night, were arrested at DeKalb. A touring car, with winter top, which gives evidence of having been recently cleaned has been found in a neglected garage here. Its owner, Alex Wanstoia, when arrested, denied any knowledge of where his car had been, police said.

Sporting

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Minnesota hockey team suffered their first defeat in two years, when the Wolverine sextet put over three goals in the final frame, overcoming an early Gopher lead and placing them at the long end of a 3 to 2 score. In a number of rushes the Wolverines carried the ruber to Minnesota's end of ice, where Henderson and MacDuff provided the necessary score.

Minneapolis—The American Association will present a united front in opposition to all efforts by the major leagues to impose the draft or any sugar coated substitute therefore upon the recalcitrant minors. This is the opinion of G. K. Belden, president of the Minneapolis club, who will represent the Millers at the Association meeting in Chicago.

New York—Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion and Sailor Friedman, Chicago, challenger, have been signed to meet in a 15 round bout for the title at the Polo Grounds on July 2, according to Tom O'Rourke, matchmaker for the Republic Athletic club. Both have agreed to make 135 pounds at 2 o'clock and they will work for a percentage.

Foreign

Berlin—Negotiations for the flotation of an internal gold loan of 200 million marks will be begun between the minister of finance and representatives of industry, finance and shipping. As the loan is to be on a gold basis, it is expected its specifications will uncover a large amount of high-value currencies now in concealment.

Essen—Vice Lord Mayor Schaaf of Essen, who was tried by the Bredeny court-martial, charged with not supplying automobiles and coal for the troops, contended that the government to which he owed allegiance had forbidden his fulfilling such orders. He was sentenced to two years in jail and a fine of 10 million marks.

Athens—The Greek croix de guerre was awarded for the first time women when the Greek government presented it to two Americans, Dr. Mabel Elliott of Benton Harbor, Mich., and Dr. Esther Lovejoy of New York. The honors were bestowed because of their work with the near east relief in Smyrna and in saving many persons from death at the risk of their own lives.

Berlin—Newspapers made a sensational display of a dispatch from Gelsenkirchen, which declared the German police in that city had barricaded themselves in their barracks to prevent being disarmed, and are surrounded by French troops who have placed cannon and machine guns.

Dublin—The Dublin-to-Galway mail train was wrecked after the passengers had been ordered out by armed men at Streamstown station. The train was sent headlong towards a bridge that had been blown up, and crashed into the gap. It was completely destroyed.

ALLIES, IN NOTE, WARN TURKEY

Warships To Defy Ban at Smyrna, Ismid—Turks Stand Firm.

London—A stern note of warning was sent to Turkey by the Allied powers, the foreign office announced.

The Turks were notified the Allies will refuse to obey the Turkish demand for withdrawal of foreign warships from the Turkish ports of Smyrna and Ismid. Turkey is warned "not to attempt any offensive steps."

Admiralty officials said there were only a few mines in the Smyrna harbor. Full precautions have been taken to guard against dangers.

CONSUL OUSTER HIT BY U. S.

Hughes Sends Sharp Note Condemning Newcastle Action.

Washington—The United States has prepared a sharp note to Great Britain denouncing the attitude of the latter government in expelling two American consuls from Newcastle, England.

The note, signed by Secretary of State C. E. Hughes, takes no trouble to conceal the displeasure of the American government at the stand taken by Great Britain in connection with its action some months ago in cancelling recognition of the United States consuls at Newcastle.

It is understood that Secretary Hughes shortly will publish the American note, making plain the extreme displeasure of this government. The Newcastle incident has caused an unusual amount of friction between the two governments.

IRISH REBELS BLOW BRIDGE

Attacks Directed by Bofin From Honeymoon Cave.

London—Bitter fighting is in progress in the Arigna mountains of County Cavan where General Bofin, the Irregular leader, and his bride, are spending their honeymoon in a cave from which the bridegroom directs the operations of the rebel band against the Free State troops, says a news dispatch from Belfast.

The Free Staters are gradually closing in on Bofin and his followers. The Irregulars are known to have lost two men killed and 17 wounded while 16 of Bofin's men, attempting to fight their way through were captured and taken to Sligor.

POLES WOUNDED IN CLASH

Irregulars Forced to Retreat From Neutral Zone—Sovereignty Granted.

Warsaw—Clashes between Polish troops and Lithuanian irregulars have occurred at several places in the occupation of the neutral zone alloted to Poland by the League of Nations.

Twelve Polish soldiers were wounded, while the Lithuanians left several wounded on the field before they were forced to retreat.

The greater part of the southern area and an important section of the center zone given to Poland now is under Polish administration. The Lithuanians still are resisting the occupation of the remainder of the area.

SEA ROUTE TO AID FARMERS

Canal Will Open Needed Markets of the World, Jacobson Says.

Minneapolis—Bringing ocean-going vessels to the ports of Duluth and Superior by carrying out the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project will open up the markets of the world to Northwest producers, O. P. B. Jacobson, member of the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse commission, declared at a dinner of the Minnesota Farmers & Grain Dealers' association.

Twelve million bushels of undug potatoes in the Northwest would have found their way to the world's market had the lake-to-ocean route been a reality this year, Mr. Jacobsor said. South America wants to buy these potatoes, yet the Northwest producer has not been given suitable transportation facilities, he said. Norway, he said, is shipping potatoes into Cuba and yet Northwest farmers are unable to find a market.

Harding Accepts Forbes' Resignation.

Washington—The resignation of Colonel Charles R. Forbes as director of Veterans bureau has been accepted by President Harding.

Without comment, White House officials made public an undated letter from the retiring director, now in Europe, assigning ill health as the reason for his resignation.

There was no mention, either in the letter or by officials at the executive offices, of the charges of improper administration in the bureau which recently led to an investigation.

4 Herrin Jurors Are Accepted.

Marion, Ill.—The definite acceptance of the first panel of four jurors in the second trial of men accused of participation in the Herrin mine riots last June, in progress here, was probable. Defense attorneys were considering the panel, which was tendered by the state. Two of the members of the panel, a farmer and a member of the painters union, have been tentatively held for several days by both sides. The two prospective jurors added by the prosecution included a union carpenter and a chauffeur.

Why Farmers are Turning to CHEVROLET
for Economical Transportation
In 1922 Chevrolet jumped from seventh to second place in sales of all cars, and to first place in sales of fully equipped modern cars.
Purchases by farmers were the chief factor in this remarkable development.
Farmers want automobiles not only of low first price, but also of low later cost for operation and maintenance.
They want room, comfort, and the ability to stand up under hard conditions.
They find that Chevrolet, fully equipped as sold, is the best value per dollar in the low-priced field, and neighbors tell them it costs less per mile to operate.

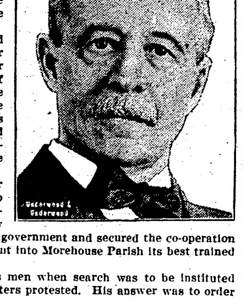
Artist Who Never Had Chance to Paint

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

When John Wanamaker died everybody knew that the cloak of his power would be handed over to his son Rodman, whose name is familiar to many but whose personality is less well known. Photographs of his have been frequently seen in the pictorial sections of newspapers and magazines, but they told little of his story. If one went further and read the title, it usually told of his work as a deputy police commissioner in New York. A few know him as a man carrying an enormous life insurance. He is also known as the chairman of the committee to select New York's permanent war memorial.

In this last position is the key to Rodman Wanamaker's real nature. His intimates say that he is an artist who has been prevented by fate from painting. An expression of his artistic instinct was his founding in 1889 of the American Art Association of Paris, of which he is still president. Rodman Wanamaker early conceived the idea that America could be trained to art appreciation through the merchandise it bought. "I wonder whether he will ever learn what we want," was the plaint often made by his father. To Rodman Wanamaker, however, the problem was a more difficult one. "I wonder whether he ever can be taught to want the things that are beautiful," was his way of putting it.

"The Fightin'est Man in the South"



Underwood & Underwood

When Gov. John M. Parker took a fresh chew of tobacco, gave an extra hitch to his belt and started out single-handed and alone to make war on imperial wizards, exalted cyclopses, grand dragons, terrors and whatnots of the Ku Klux Klan, the invisible empire found itself at grips with "the fightin'est man in the South."

No man in public life ever had more devoted friends or more bitter enemies. Opponents of the governor have applied to him every epithet of which the tongue has knowledge save that of coward. For to doubt the courage of the Louisiana executive is to make one ridiculous, so widespread is his reputation for nerve and determination to accomplish anything he sets out to do.

There were no funds available for investigation. Parker dug down into his pocket. When he found his investigators were being balked at every turn, he appealed to the United States government and secured the co-operation of the Department of Justice, which sent into Morehouse Parish its best trained men.

Then he sent troops to guard his men when search was to be instituted for the bodies. Citizens from all quarters protested. His answer was to order out a machine gun company.

FRENCH EXPEL 63 RUHR OFFICIALS

Officials of 28 Towns Ousted—Families Given Four Days To Leave.

Coblenz—The French expelled 63 officials from 28 occupied towns in the Ruhr area for insubordination to the demands of the invaders. The order was issued by the Rihneland commission.

Faimlies of the expelled officials were given four days to follow them.

Ouster of the officials was the first step of a more rigorous French policy toward inhabitants of the occupied area as the result of stiffened resistance by the German population.

The previous policy of conciliating the population will be abandoned, it was announced from Paris.

The German police at Gelsenkirchen defied the French by barricading themselves in their barracks to prevent being disarmed.

An imposing display of military force was seen in many parts of the Ruhr. Reinforcements marched into Gelsinkirchen and at the head of the French column—according to a dispatch via Berlin—walked a major of the local police, held as a hostage.

Twenty companies of infantry with many batteries of field guns and long trains of field kitchens traversed Dortmund en route to Wanne and Eitchel.

BRITAIN MAKES NEW PROFFER

Kemal Makes No Effort to Eject Allied Warships From Harbor.

Constantinople — Britain jumped into the near east situation with a new effort to make the Turks accept the Lausanne treaty and insure peace.

Turkish Foreign Minister Ismet Pasha will lay before the national assembly at Angora an official communication from Great Britain asking that the Lausanne treaty be recognized.

This letter, bearing the signature of Lord Curzon, British foreign minister, was delivered to Ismet by General Harington. The meeting between the Hoslem diplomat and the aged high commissioners was most cordial. Ismet declared he was most confident that complete agreement—and peace—would be possible soon after he put the situation squarely before the assembly.

The British letter pointed out the great advantages that would come to Turkey under the Lausanne pact.

U. S. STARTS FILM INQUIRY

Famous Players Laskey Corporation to Answer Monopoly Charges.

Washington—Aggressive steps to determine whether leading figures of the motion picture industry in the United States are unfairly conspiring to strangle independent producers and exhibitors in an attempt to monopolize the industry were taken by the federal trade commission. The commission issued an amended complaint naming the Famous Players-Lasky corporation and others, calling on them to prepare to answer the charges at hearings to open here on April 5 or shortly thereafter.

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Laskey, president and vicepresident, respectively, of the Famous Players corporation, were named as participating in a conspiracy "to monopolize the motion picture industry."

SENATE SIDETRACKS SUBSIDY

Chairman Jones Serves Notice of Night Sessions to Speed Passage.

Washington—Administration leaders failed to hold the senate to consideration of the ship subsidy bill. After approving a few minor committee amendments to the bill the senate branched off into a four hour discussion of questions bearing on the invalidation of laws by the courts.

The senate failed to reach the consideration of any of the compromise amendments introduced by Senator W. L. Jones who is in charge of the ship subsidy bill.

Senator Jones served notice that he would attempt to hold the senate in night sessions would be avoided only by an agreement for a vote on the bill.

9 STATES IN FARM CONGRESS

Two Members of Harding Cabinet Respond to Bids.

St. Paul—Answers received from nine governors, two cabinet members and bankers and business men throughout nine states indicate that several thousand will be present at the Northwest Agricultural Price Stabilization congress, Feb. 27 and 28, at St. Paul.

Invitations were sent to the governors of Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, North and South Dakota, Montana, Nebraska and Iowa, and to Secretary of Agriculture H. C. Wallace and Secretary of the Treasury Andrew Mellon.

Big Saving With Barge Lines.

La Crosse, Wis.—Shippers and consumers here have been busily figuring this winter how much they would save by the establishment of barge lines for freight carrying on the upper Mississippi, espcially to and from the twin cities. Figures have been obtained from a Wisconsin congressman, verified by United States engineers, showing that one line of barges carrying freight on the river below St Louis, saves the people of the towns it served about $25,000 a year.

"Will Rust Destroy It?"
Each year, as you look over your fields of growing wheat, the question which disturbs your peace of mind is: "Will rust destroy it before harvest?" For stem rust takes its toll in millions of dollars from the farmers' pockets each year, and there is no way of knowing in advance when or where it will strike. It appears at irregular intervals, more frequently during recent years, sweeping across great areas of wheat-growing regions and completely destroys enormous quantities of wheat. The United States Department of Agriculture states that stem rust destroyed 280,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1916, and it is estimated that it destroys from $60,000,000 to $350,000,000 worth of wheat every year.
So long as you continue to grow a variety of wheat which is susceptible to rust, you are gambling each year as to whether rust will partially or completely destroy your crop. Your crop may not have been affected by rust last year, but it may be totally destroyed this year, and you can't afford to take the risk.
STOP THE WORRY AND LOSSES WITH KOTA
You can relieve yourself of the burden of anxiety and insure your crop against destruction by rust by planting Kota wheat. Kota has been tested and closely observed by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and by various Experiment Stations during the past five years, and the data show that NOT ONCE DURING THAT TIME HAS IT BEEN SUFFICIENTLY INFECTED WITH RUST TO PERCEPTIBLY AFFECT THE YIELD. In addition to its undeniable resistance to rust, it has proved to be quite resistant to drought, to be a first-class milling and baking wheat, and it has outyielded Marquis by over four bushels to the acre in a five-year average at the Fargo station. (Complete data furnished on request.)
Kota will bring peace of mind to you and your family, as well as adding extra dollars to your bank account. You are in the business of farming to make money and you owe it to yourself to plant the wheat which promises a sure crop and an attractive return on your labor and investment.
It will cost you only $3 more per acre to grow Kota wheat than it would to grow ordinary wheat. For that $3 difference you get three things: Insurance against rust, higher yield, a crop you can sell for seed at a good premium above market price. Any one of those things is worth more than $3 an acre to you, but the three combined make it a highly profitable business proposition to buy Kota seed.
Kota wheat is endorsed and sold by the following seed houses: Oscar H. Will, Bismarck; Interstate Seed Co., Fargo; Valker-Christensen Co., Minot.

Extending Bombay, India.

Extensive reclamation work is being carried on at Bombay, India, says an illustrated article in the Popular Mechanics Magazine. By means of a great inclosing sea wall, four miles long, 1,145 acres of back bay will be reclaimed. The estimated quantities of material required for this wall in cubic feet are: Rubble, 9,223,280; heavy pitching stone, 3,465,500, and concrete, 3,694,690. An additional work of smaller importance is another reclamation of some 132 acres. The estimated total cost of these enterprises, less interest during the six years required for completion, is £583,333.

Suns in the Borning.

The Harvard scientists working at the astronomical observatory in Peru say that they have discovered and photographed 2,000 new suns which are just being launched into existence and which will some day in all probability be full-grown suns like our own, each with its own solar system. The nebulae are in the shape of whirling spirals of what looks like luminous vapor. It is supposed that they condense in the course of ages into suns and throw off pieces that condense more rapidly than the main body did, being smaller, and so become planets. Nearly 25 years ago Professor Holden of the Lick observatory estimated there were at least a half million uncharted nebulae to be discovered, so that those which have been discovered are only a small part of this number

Gov. Allen Tells Farmers U. S. Ships Will Aid Them

By HENRY J. ALLEN
Governor of Kansas

© HARRIS & EWING

THE establishment of the American merchant marine is an element of transportation and is vital, in my opinion, to the continued economic welfare of the agricultural states. World conditions now make the sale of goods in competitive foreign markets more difficult than ever. The American farmer, miner, merchant and mechanic can not compete in selling their excess products abroad unless we have our own delivery system, owned and operated by Americans.

I believe that the only practical way of establishing the Merchant Marine is to pass the pending Shipping Bill which provides an encouragement of from one-half to two and six-tenth cents per ton, per hundred miles, based on speed and distance. The bill also preserves the established trade routes and gives ample protection to the Mississippi Valley, in its ability to acquire at its respective ports, the necessary ships from the government, in order that private operators who understand their business may take care of the commerce of the Valley.

The creation of a permanent merchant marine by means of this act will furnish additional employment to over one hundred thousand Americans on board ships and in shipyards, the steel mills, the iron mines and in many other industries which are necessary to build and operate ships for foreign trade. Every man thus employed must be well fed and the American farmer will be benefitted by raising and selling foods to them and their families.

The Shipping Bill and the Merchant Marine are by way of establishing a sound, national policy—which we have been discussing for fifty years. Of course the fact that we have the ships now in possession of the government, most of them standing idle, should at least demand careful consideration and settlement of this issue once and for all. Of course the fact that we now pay an indirect subsidy of $50,000,000 per year for making up the deficit in the Shipping Board is an incentive to the establishment of a direct subsidy whose maximum would be only $30,000,000 per year.

I believe thoughtful men realise the benefit and advantage from the merchant marine. The wheat of Kansas and of other Upper Valley states; the corn and corn products and livestock, and meat products; the output of industrial institutions entering foreign trade, must find orderly processes of transportation if a reasonable measure of prosperity is to come to this section.

Foreign trade has already interested this great producing section of the country, not in any spirit of romance or artistry, but as a practical business transaction for the disposal of our domestic over-consumption. The legislation now before Congress giving assistance to the shipowners and operators of the country and providing for the disposal of the ships now operated by the United States Shipping Board, will prove valuable to all producers of agricultural and manufactured goods. In Kansas and other farming states, continued prosperity must come from new markets for agricultural products and lowered transportation costs to those markets. Foreign trade is the answer to the question of new markets.

I have given reasonable study to the transportation question. I believe Merchant Marine is part of it. I believe the Shipping Bill is the only way of getting a Merchant Marine. I believe our people, the more they study the question, are inclined to feel the same way about it.

Our rivals for the world's trade view with great alarm the prospects of the passage of the bill and their representatives are spreading insidious propaganda and doing their utmost to defeat the measure. This is the strongest evidence possible why the bill will benefit America and why it should receive the support of patriotic Americans.

As a supporter of the claims of the Middle West for greater opportunities in all matters pertaining to transportation and accessibility to the sea, I hope this Jones-Greene Shipping Bill will be passed by our national Congress this session.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed and delivered by Caroline Runge, a widow, Mortgagor, to Farmers State Bank of Mavie, Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of December 1921, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of December, 1921, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 108 of Mortgages on page 186, and

Whereas, the said Farmers State Bank of Mavie, Mortgagee, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and whereas there is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $616.00, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is Hereby Given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lots Ten (10) and Eleven (11) in Section Thirty-one (31) of Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, Range Forty-one (41) West, and Lots Three (3), Four (4) and Five (5) and Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of Northwest Quarter (NW1-4) of Section six (6) of Township One Hundred Fifty-four (154) North, Range Forty one (41) West in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $616.00, and interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

% Are De Lavals

The overwhelming number of De Laval Cream Separators in use is proved in a striking and forceful way by three recent investigations conducted by disinterested people, covering most of the principal butter-producing states:

(1) From an investigation conducted by the Purdue Agriculturist (Indiana), Iowa Agriculturist, Cornell Countryman (New York), Agricultural Student (Ohio), Penn State Farmer, Tennessee Farmer, published by the students of the various agricultural colleges in question, and their readers, who received the questionnaire, are either graduates or former students:

64.8% use cream separators of the following makes:

50.6%—De Laval.
16.8%—Nearest competitor.

(2) Sixty-two per cent of the cream separators on 388 representative Minnesota dairy farms, selected at random and over a wide area, are De Lavals, according to a survey recently made by The Farmer, of St. Paul.

De Laval—62%.
Nearest competitor—6.4%.

(3) From the Dairy Farm Survey of Hoard's Dairyman (the foremost dairy paper in the world, having a circulation of approximately 85,000 at the time of this investigation).

Have you a cream separator?
80.00%—Yes.
What make?
41.18%—De Laval.
16.74%—Nearest competitor.
51.26%—average number of De Lavals, based on the foregoing, which confirms the well-known statement that there are about as many De Lavals in use as all the rest combined.

The only reason there are so many more De Lavals in use is that it is the best separator—skims cleaner, lasts longer, and is easier to clean and turn.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Lewis Anderson and Lena Anderson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Trust Company, trustee under the last Will and Testament of Patrick F. Lyons, deceased, mortgagees, dated August 20, 1917, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, September 13, 1917, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on Page 231, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of Five thousand dollars ($5000) principal and Three hundred dollars ($300) represented by an interest coupon by said mortgage secured which became due September 1, 1922. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable the sums of Five thousand dollars principal and Three hundred dollars interest coupon with interest upon both amounts at six per cent per annum since September 1, 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice of Five thousand four hundred nineteen and and 25-100 dollars ($5419.25), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Southwest quarter (SW1-4), and the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-eight (158), North of Range Forty-five (45) excepting therefrom two acres described as follows:

Beginning at the Northeast corner of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of said Section twenty-one in said Township and Range, running west five chains, thence south four chains, thence east five chains, thence north four chains to the starting point. All of the above being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Marshall County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Warren in said County and State on the 13th day of March, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $5,419.25 and interest from date of this notice and taxes, if any, and an attorneys fee of One hundred dollars ($100) as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Gangenes, a single man Mortgagor, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation of the State of Minnesota Mortgagee, bearing date the 18th day of October 1918, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of November 1918, at 11:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages, on page 149.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company, Mortgagee, to Farmers State Bank of Goodridge, by written assignment dated the 30th day of January 1923, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 2nd day of February 1923, at 1 o'clock P. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages on page 110

AND WHEREAS, The said Farmers State Bank of Goodridge the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the 5th day of February 1923, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and purusant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S1-2 NW1-4) and North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N1-2 SW1-4) of Section One (1) in Township One Hundred Fifty Four (154) North of Range (40) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1923, at one o'clock P. "I'M HALF CRAZY"

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga, and to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. With his friend Pelt, a newspaper man, Bartley goes to Circle Lake, the pair becoming the guests of Bob Currie, an old friend. The three visit the Slyke home. Slyke resents Bartley's coming, saying he is satisfied the two men in prison are guilty. Bartley is not. Next morning Slyke is found dead in bed, apparently having shot himself. Miss Potter, the dead man's sister-in-law, the village police chief, Roche, and the family physician, Doctor King, all agree Slyke killed himself, but Bartley insists he was murdered. Investigating, Bartley finds evidence that Slyke, after a card party he had given, was shot on the tower of the house, undressed, and placed in bed.

As if answering my thoughts, he said, "Yes, Slyke was murdered here."

Though I had been sure he would say that, it did not seem reasonable that any person should select the balcony of a tower, fifty or more feet in the air, as a place in which to commit a murder. It became still more puzzling when I remembered that Slyke had been carried down two flights of stairs, undressed, placed in bed and a revolver clasped in his hand. Roche, his fat face puzzled, gave me a bewildered glance. I could sympathize with his astonishment as I felt much the same way myself.

I expressed my surprise to Bartley and he responded, "I know, Pelt, all that you have said and all that you are thinking. It does seem out of all reason that anyone should pick the top of this tower for a murder. Yet here are the spots of blood, and there are none anywhere else. I am sure he was not killed downstairs; it must have been here, and—"

He paused and, bending over, picked something up. At first I could not make out what it was; then I saw that it was a gold-plated collar-button such as a man wears in the front of his shirt. Roche needed only one look to identify it, "Slyke's!"

Bartley did not speak until he had walked entirely around the tower and was again beside us.

"Chief," he said, "we may say there is no doubt that Slyke was killed up here. I do not know why such a strange place was chosen, but I do know that he was dragged down these stairs after his death and placed in his bed to make his death appear to be suicide. The odds were very much in favor of the criminal's being able to succeed in his design, too. But he slipped up—slipped up in the manner in which he put the gun in the hand and in the way in which he closed the eyes. But why he should have killed Slyke up here I cannot understand."

He paused for a moment, as if thinking, then continued, "Slyke gave a party last evening. The crime must have been committed after the party broke up. That was probably between one and two o'clock in the morning. One man, perhaps two, stayed behind to talk with Slyke. We can't say positively that they did, but they may have. Roche thinks that this man, or men, committed the murder. One man may have stayed and then gone away before the murder, or someone else may have come later. They may have come up here to see the view, and one of them shot him. After the crime the body, at any rate, was taken downstairs again and undressed, the nightshirt placed on it, and it laid in bed. As he wanted it to appear like suicide, the murderer placed the gun in the dead man's fingers, but he either did not remember, or perhaps did not know, how the eyes should look after a sudden death. The very things done to make us think it was suicide prove that it could not have possibly been one."

As Bartley was now ready to go downstairs again, we all returned to the room below. The first thing we saw when we entered, was a brown stocking, the mate to the one in the room below. We had not noticed it on our way to the balcony as it lay half under the rug, and the opened door hid it. Bartley picked it up, glanced at it, smiled, and was going to say something when a voice called to us from below.

In a second we were down the stairs and in Slyke's bedroom. The door to the stairway was closed just as we had left it; Bartley opened it to find a young man with a big camera under his arm on the landing. He gave us an inquiring glance; then seeing Roche, whom he seemed to know, he announced, "Doctor King said you wanted me up here to take some pictures. What shall I take first?"

Bartley glanced at the bed and I thought gave a slight start. The bedclothes that had been drawn down around Slyke's waist when we were examining the revolver in his hand, had been replaced by Bartley, before we went to the floor above, in the position in which they were when we entered the room—that is, around Slyke's neck and half covering his chin.

"You had better take first a picture of the bed as it is now," Bartley suggested. "Then I will pull the bedclothes down and you can take a picture of his hand with the revolver in it."

The first picture took some time, for the young man could not seem to find the proper place for his camera, but at last it was done.

"Now for the other one." Bartley went to the side of the bed, reached down, and pulled back the bedclothes. As he drew them down he paused and a cry escaped him.

"Look!"

As my eyes fell on the hand of the dead man I, too, started. When we had gone upstairs the revolver was clasped in Slyke's still fingers. Now they were empty. Someone had removed the gun!

CHAPTER IV

The Dead Man's Eyes.

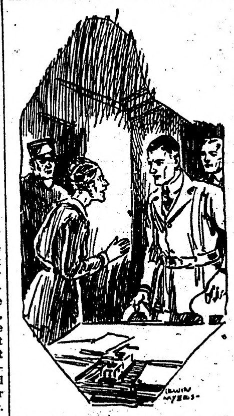
For several moments we were all so startled that none of us spoke. For myself, I could only look at the hand that had, so short a time before, held the revolver. I could not imagine who could have taken it, and what his purpose in doing so could be. I glanced at Bartley. His face was set, a white line showing around his tightly closed lips. He was angry, very angry.

As he turned to Roche, who stood with eyes bulging, his voice shook a little. "Roche, go and get Miss Potter at once. Tell her to call all the servants and have them assemble in the living room. I will be down in a moment."

Roche hurried out without speaking. Immediately Bartley bent again over the bed, studying the position of the hand that had held the revolver. When he straightened up he told the photographer that he would not need him any longer. As soon as the young man had left the room, Bartley turned to me with a rueful little smile.

"Well, Pelt, I certainly slipped up this morning. We left this room without locking the door. True, there was no key, but I should have left either Roche or you on guard. Instead of that we have given someone a chance to slip in here and remove the revolver. He thought he was removing a valuable piece of evidence. The joke is that the removal of the revolver does not make much difference. We all saw the gun, and we all heard Miss Potter say that it had belonged to Slyke."

"But," I asked, "who could have known about it—I mean that it was murder? You were the only one who suggested it. Every one else who knew about the crime thought it was suicide."



She Shrieked, "You Say I Know Who Killed Him—I—I Know?"

"That's the queer thing about it, Pelt. Only those that were in the room with us are presumed to know it is murder. That is, unless Miss Potter told others when she left here. The strange thing is that it was first made to appear to be suicide by placing the gun in Slyke's hand. Now that evidence is removed I hardly know what we are expected to believe. I had an idea, even before we came into this room, that Miss Potter knew that her brother-in-law had been murdered."

What more he might have said I do not know, for at that moment Roche returned. He looked sheepish and rather ill at ease. He told us that Miss Potter had refused to call the servants, saying that Bartley had no authority to compel her to do so, and—he paused a moment, his red face flushing a deeper red—she had added that she considered Roche was the only one who had any authority to give orders here. For herself, she was convinced that Slyke had committed suicide, and that Bartley did not know what he was talking about when he said that he had been murdered.

Bartley gave a low whistle. "Does that satisfy you, Roche?" he asked.

"No, it doesn't," Roche replied, shaking his head vigorously. "It doesn't, not by one little bit. I am frank enough to say, Mr. Bartley, that though I don't see any light in this all, I know you can. Your experience and reputation are both greater than mine. I am, of course, the head of the local police and shall have to put up some kind of a bluff, but I wish you would take charge of the case."

"You say Miss Potter doesn't wish to give us any aid at all?"

Roche nodded.

"Well, then, Roche, we will have to go down and see what we can do with her together. You tell her I am your assistant. You might also add that if she refuses to give us the information we need, we can arrest her on the charge of obstructing an officer in the discharge of his duty."

Both men grinned at this, and, still smiling, Roche led the way from the room. From the top of the stairs we could see Miss Potter in the living room below, pacing nervously back and forth. When she heard us descending, with Roche in the lead, she stopped at the desk and began to arrange its contents in an effort to cover her nervousness and confusion. She did not look up even when we were at her side.

After waiting for her to speak, Bartley said in a grave tone, "Miss Potter, I understand that you told Officer Roche that you refused to call the servants."

She raised her face, crimson with anger, and tried to answer, but though her lips formed the words not a sound came from them. At last, in a voice broken with passion and with words stumbling one over the other, she said, "I—yes—it's so. I—told Mr. Roche not to call the servants. No one asked you to come here. You have no business in this house—looking into things that do not concern you. Mr. Slyke is dead, and every one will believe that he killed himself in spite of anything you can say. Anything that has to be done Mr. Roche can do. It's none of your business, anyway."

Standing in front of us with her figure straight and her shoulders thrown back defiantly, she almost shrieked the last words at us. She was so angry that she did not seem to know what she was saying. I wondered why she should be in such a rage. So far as I could see, there was no reason for it. We stood silent and embarrassed. Bartley's eyes never left her face. Under his grave scrutiny she flushed and her eyes dropped.

"Miss Potter," he said suddenly, "you don't want me to believe that you know who killed your brother-in-law, do you?"

His question seemed the last straw. She turned on him like a fury, and her eyes roved over the desk as if she were looking for something to throw at him. She shrieked, "You say I know who killed him—I—I know? Why, I don't even believe that he was murdered. How dare you say that—how can you stand there and say it to my face?"

Bartley shrugged his shoulders. "I don't say that you know, but if you keep on acting like this whenever you are asked a question some one else will. If it should come out at the inquest, for instance, that you refused to allow us to question the servants, people may not only think you know, but they may go even further. If you don't aid us, Roche can arrest you for obstructing an officer in the performance of his duty."

This was news to her. Anger gave place to fear, and she looked at us helplessly. Bartley realized that, overcome by what she had been through, she was not herself, and added kindly, "I know this death must have shocked you terribly, Miss Potter. I am trying my best to make it easier for you. I did not force myself into the house. Doctor King himself asked me to come this morning. What you do not seem to comprehend is that a serious crime has been committed. Your brother-in-law has been murdered, and the law will demand to know who did it. It will also want to know if you did everything in your power to help us to discover the murderer."

For a moment she said nothing, then she turned and faced Bartley, her eyes searching his, and in the tone of one weary and broken she said, "I will do what I can to help you."

She hesitated and brushed the unkempt hair again and again from her eyes, as if hardly knowing what she was doing.

"It's driving me wild. I am half crazy," she cried suddenly, and taking an uncertain step forward stumbled almost to her knees.

Bartley placed his arm around her and led her to a chair. Then turning to Roche, he asked him to call the servants.

As soon as Roche had gone, Bartley began to examine the room. A few feet away from him were three card tables, their surfaces littered with playing cards, just as they had been thrown down when the last game was over; so, too, the chairs were in the same position into which they had been pushed when the players rose for the last time. Bartley picked up the cards on the nearest table and counted them. He did the same thing with those on the second table and on the third. At the last table he paused longer than he had at the other two. Finally he took from his pocket the two cards we had found in the tower and motioned to me to join him.

As I reached Bartley's side, he asked me to count the cards on the table. I did so and found the pack was two cards short. As I finished, he handed me the two cards that we had found upstairs saying, "Look at these."

Suddenly a girlish voice called,
"Who is talking about me?"

WOULD BLOCK PACKER MERGER

Sec. Wallace Changes Mind and Now Seeks to Stop Big Consolidation.

MERGER IS DELAYED

Declares Acquisition Would Effect a Restraint of Interstate Commerce and Would Be Creating a Monopoly.

Washington—Another battle was begun by the government against what it claims would be a monopoly in industry when Secretary Wallace of the agricultural department took steps to prevent Armour & Co. of Chicago from acquiring the plants and business of Morris & Co., another of the "big five" packers. Consummation of the consolidation would result in the largest meat packing enterprise in the history of the country with annual sales of more than $1,000,000,000.

P. Edson White, president of the Armour & Co., declaring the present administration had proclaimed its belief in "less government in business and more business in government" said in a statement made public here and in Chicago that his company heartily subscribed to that slogan, and was willing to meet the issue involved speedily and without fear of the result. Before legality of the merger is finally decided, several months is expected to lapse, and in all probability the case will reach the supreme court for determination.

Secretary Wallace, proceeding under authority given him in the packers and stockyards act, served complaints on Armour & Co., J. Ogden Armour, and Morris & Co., charging them with violation of the act by entering into a written agreement for the sale of Morris & Co. The complaints said transfer was to be made on or before February 28 and that Morris & Co. would be eliminated entirely as a competitor in the packing business. The acquisition, the complaints set forth, would effect a restraint of interstate commerce and would have the effect of creating a monopoly in many sections of the United States in the purchase of livestock and in the shipment and sale of meat and other livestock products in this country and abroad. The merger would materially increase the power of Armour & Co., it was stated, to control and dominate the livestock and meat packing industry.

FARM MANAGEMENT WEEK

A. C. Short Course Will Take Up Farm Manageemnt March 5-10.

Fargo, N. D.—New data pointing the way to more profitable methods in farm management and more effective systems of farm finance and marketing will be presented to farmers and others who attend the sessions of "Farm Management Week" at the North Dakota Agricultural college, March 5 to 10, inclusive, according to C. B. Waldron, dean of agriculture. Farm management week is one of the uint weeks of the eight week winter short course in progress at the college now.

Organization and the systematizing of the farmer's own business, and the development of organizations by farmers as a whole for the purpose of financing and marketing their products, are subjects which will be stressed during the week. Potato and horticulture week precedes farm management week, and farm machinery week follows. While most of the persons attending the short course are enrolled for the entire eight weeks, the course has been so arranged that farmers who are particularly interested in a single week's subject matter may attend only one week.

The program for farm management week is as follows:

8 a. m. to 10 a. m., Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday — Farm accounting; importance and extent of work, how to keep farm records, farm inventory, possibilities and limitations of cost of production work, results obtained in North Dakota in cost of production and plans for future work. Rex E. Willard.

8 a. m. to 10 a. m., Thursday, Friday, and Saturday—Farm manageemnt; importance of planning, size of farm, farm organization, land, labor, capital, farm reorganization, and farm layout. Professor Miller.

10 a. m. daily—Types of farms, relation of labor to type of farming, farm tenure, farm labor, horse and machine labor. Professor Miller.

11 a. m. daily—New legislation on farm finance and farm marketing, marketing of grain, ways of securing farm credit. Some factors necessary for success in marketing, co-operative marketing, potato marketing situation in North Dakota. President Coulter, Dr. Benton, and Mr. Wolff.

Future Trading Act Before Court.

Washington—The supreme court for the second time has been asked to determine whether congress, in its efforts to regulate future trading in grain and to provide governmental supervision under which farmers' co-operative associations would be admitted to membership on grain exchanges, had exceeded its constitutional authority. In the former case when congress attempted control through its taxing power, the court held that act invalid. Congress holds that it was acting within its power.

TOWNLEY HEADS NEW FARM BODY

National Producers Alliance is Formed by Group Gathered From 12 States.

PRICE FIXING IS AIM

Co-operative Control of Acreage and Information Dissemination Is Planned—Members Required to Keep Accounts.

Minneapolis—A. C. Townley, founder and former president and directing genius of the National Nonpartisan league, is the head of a new nationwide nonpolitical farm movement which was launched by a group of 75 farmers from 12 states at a meeting here, according to an announcement by leaders of the movement.

Price Stabilization Aim.

According to the announcement, the purpose of the new organization, which is named the National Producers' alliance, is the stabilization of farm product prices through voluntary, co-operative control of acreage and dissemination of price and market information and advice.

Articles of the association adopted provide for an initiation fee of $4 and thereafter quarterly dues of $1 per member. Half of the dues go to the local precinct unit and half to the national office.

National Committee Named.

The national committee of the new organization was announced as follows: N. K. Wicks, Brantford, N. D.; Dan Eliason, Crooks, S. D.; Herman Meyers, Hooper, Neb.; C. J. Diedrich, Selden, Kan.; O. S. Evans, Neosha, Mo.; L. J. Kalvieg, Kanawha, Iowa; Louis Larson, Harriss, Minn.; W. L. Andrews, Geneseo, Ill.; Arthur T. Harvey, Billings, Mont.; T. L. Crews, Eureka Springs, Ark.; O. M. Tronsas, Boise, Idaho; D. F. Hollywood, Arapahoe, Colo.

The organization proposes to:

Organize the farmers into precinct units on an intensive organization plan much like the plan of the Nonpartisan league.

Keep Acreage Accounts.

Cause farmers to keep accurate accounts as to crop acreage and costs, with quarterly meetings of precinct units to compare costs of individual farmers and make reports to a general headquarters on the acreage and cost of production of each crop in each crop area.

Establish a central bureau to compile statistics thus gathered, steady market and price conditions, and issue periodical information and advice to members as to acreage to plant and favorable time for marketing.

AMMUNITION CACHE FOUND

Rifles, Machine Guns and Hand Grenades Found in Gotham Basement.

New York—The seizure of 75 cases of hand grenades and high explosives being unloaded from a truck into a basement in the Chelsea pier district led to the discovery of 100 more cases which had been secreted in a river front lodging house.

A few minutes later city and federal authorities uncovered in the same building 200 rifles, 20 machine guns, and large quantities of steel jacketed machine gun ammunition in belts. The explosives, in huge packing cases, were addressed to "S. C. S.—New York" and to "Arthur Leibinger, 263 West Thirty-fourth street." All were labeled "precaution; high explosives; handle with care."

Four men who were transferring the explosives were taken in custody and quizzed as to the source and destination of their cargo. They professed not to know by whom it was shipped, or where.

While a cordon of special police was thrown about the truck load and the building where part of its contents had been stowed, chiefs of the secret service, police authorities, fire department officials, heads of the bomb squad and of the bureau of combustibles, were summoned to break open and examine the strong boxes seized. The seizure was made in the Chelsea pier section of the North river, where the Cunard, White Star, and French lines have their principal docks.

The basement into which the explosives were being transferred was surmounted by a three-story building. The truck was a large one, with a canvas hood which concealed its contents.

Klan Witness Held for Contempt.

Topeka, Kan.—Opening of the hearing on the ouster petition brought by the state against the Ku Klux Klan suddenly developed into a situation as to whether the klan oath supersedes that of a witness. As a result of the refusal of H. H. Kitchen, a Klan organizer, to divulge names on a membership petition, contempt of court proceedings will be started in the supreme court, immediately, according to Assistant Attorney General John G. Egan, who conducted the state's side of the case

HAIR GROOM
Keeps Hair Combed

HAIR STAYS COMBED, GLOSSY

'Hair Groom" Keeps Hair Combed—Well-Groomed.

Millions Use It—Fine for Hair!—Not Sticky, Greasy or Smelly.

A few cents buys a jar of "Hair-Groom" at any drug store. Even stubborn, unruly or shampooed hair stays combed all day in any style you like. "Hair-Groom" is a dignified combing cream which gives that natural gloss and well-groomed effect to your hair—that final touch to good dress both in business and on social occasions.

Greaseless, stainless "Hair-Groom" does not show on the hair because it is absorbed by the scalp, therefore your hair remains so soft and pliable and so natural that no one can possibly tell you used it.

His "Surgical Operations."

Will Campbell of Cotter performed two quick surgical operations on himself recently when in stepping from his house he slipped and fell. As he was falling he twisted his body, throwing one shoulder out of joint. When he hit the ground the dislocated shoulder flopped back into place. He did not know what had happened until he consulted a physician.—Arkansas Gazette.

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Grand Rapids—Between 400 and 500 fathers and sons were to gather here at the second annual Father and Son banquet sponsored by the local Lions club.

Faribault—The Southern Minnesota Medical society will have a one day convention here June 11.

Willmar—The board of county commissioners have laid out a program for 70 miles of graveling for the summer, costing $70,000.

Two Harbors—M. H. Brickley, Duluth and Iron Range telephone manager, will head the independent voters ticket at the spring election, as the candidate at a caucus of citizens.

Thief River Falls—Ralph E. Thompson of St. Paul was appointed as engineer to make a survey of the dam property here. The council holds an option on the purchase of the property for $50,000.

Hibbing—Secretary S. V. Saxby of the Duluth Commercial club extended an invitation to the Lions club of Hibbing to attend the "Over the Top" chamber of commerce banquet at Duluth.

Hibbing—Five persons indicted by the grand jury on charges of violating the prohibition law, were arraigned in district court here and pleaded not guilty. Their bail was fixed at $500 each.

Rochester—According to a ruling made by the city council, farmers along the right of way in Olmsted and Wabasha counties will hereafter be able to get electric light and power from the Rochester plant.

East Grand Forks—Galusha Purcell was elected city treasurer by the council, to succeed the late James McIlraith, who died last week. Mr. Purcell was born and raised here and has been in the real estate business.

Red Wing—The Busch garage, operated in this city by William F. Busch, has been sold to the McCoy-Curran company of Cloquet, who have filed articles of incorporation with the register of deeds for a $50,000 corporation.

Wadena—Bob Newman brought his team in first in the Class 1 Central Minnesota dog derby under the auspices of the Lion's club. About 3,000 persons watched the derby. In the same event, Paul Koch came in second and Cyril Hensler third.

St. Paul—Minnesota, with 58 per cent of the urban population living in zoned municipalities, ranks third among the states on the basis of percentage of urban population zoned, according to a report made public by the division of building and housing of the department of commerce.

Faribault—August Kolterman, a farmer, 28 years old, died at his home near Fox Lake following the alleged drinking of liquor at a party. It is reported two neighbors of Kolterman also partook of the liquor and were made ill, but recovered. The sheriff and coroner are investigating.

International Falls—Raymond Belton, alias Raymond Arlington, who was taken in custody here by customs officials on the charge that he entered this country without the proper procedure, is being held in the county jail. Belton will be held here pending the disposition of his case by the secretary of labor.

Mankato—John N. Van der Vries of the Chicago office of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, will speak at the March membership meeting of the Mankato Civic and Commerce association, Wednesday, March 7. In the week that he appears in Mankato, Mr. Van der Vries is also to speak before the civic commercial organizations in Albert Lea, Fairbault and Rochester.

Mapleton—The campaign to place a purebred sire on every farm in the state was given hearty support at a massmeeting here attended by 300 farmers, bankers and business men. Representalves of Mapleton banks pledged finanical aid to farmers in building up their livestock herds after details of the drive were outlined to those attending the meeting. Several farmers signed up for sires following the session.

Crookston—With only one defeat on its home floor, the Crookston Company M basketball team, champions of Northwestern Minnesota, has closed its 1923 season with victories over every team played. In the thirty games played, Crookston won twenty-two and lost eight, with a grand total of 829 points against their opponents' 583. Altho the local Gunners lost seven games away from home return games played resulted in victory for the local quint. The only visiting team to win was the Two Harbors All Stars, who won the first game of three played here and two played at Two Harbors.

Fergus Falls—G. O. Dahl, aged 73, pioneer merchant of this city and a former commissioner, is dead of pneumonia.

Fairmont—Despite the low prices received for farm products last fall, only fourteen persons in Martin county who had mortgaged real estate failed to redeem it before expiration of the period of redemption February 1. This fact appears from the annual report of Register of Deeds Henry G. Sydow. This is considered a very good record, taking into consideration the boom prices paid for some of the land.

Ortonville—O. J. Kvale of Benson, congressman-elect of the seventh district, has announced the appointment of his son, Paul Kvale as his secretary.

Windom—Bernard and Irvin Meyers, brothers living near Bingham lake, have been bound over to the district court here on a charge of chicken stealing. They are out on $500 bail.

Fergus Falls—Lewis Nelson, former county treasurer at Glencoe, died at his home of congestion of the lungs. He was 72 years old.

St. James—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berntsen, residents of Watonwan county for the last 53 years, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home here.

Willmar—A farmer's co-operative elevator will be erected at Lake Lilian, the new station on the Luce Electric line in Kandiyohi county. A co-operative association has been formed and a committee of six men appointed to solicit shares and draw up the articles of incorporation.

Morristown—A special election called by the village council resulted in the voting of a $50,000 bond issue for the financing of a municipal water works system. The election gave the project a majority of 161 with 208 for and 47 against passage.

Hibbing—S. M. Chambers of Duluth, discussed the proposed county welfare consolidation bill here at a meeting of the Crescent Aid society. He also addressed the Civic club on the same topic. No formal action on the bill was taken.

Duluth—Pope Pius XI has appointed Rt. Rev. John T. McNicholas, Catholic bishop of Duluth, bishop assistant to the throne at Rome, according to a cable from Rome received here. The title is purely honorary and will not necessitate Bishop McNicholas' attendance in Rome.

Winona—The Mississippi river at this point is gradually rising after droping to a stage exceeded only once since records have been kept here. The recent fall reached a point nine-tenths of a foot below what has been designated here for many years as low water mark.

Park Rapids—The rear cars in a southbound Great Northern stock train were derailed by a broken rail near Horton, seven miles south of here, and Conductor Blossingham of Melrose received bruises and cuts on the arm and body when the caboose, in which he was riding, overturned.

Worthington—The annual ice harvest on Lake Okabena is being completed. The work has furnished employment for a large crew of men for several weeks. More than 300 cars of ice have been shipped to Omaha for use of the North Western railway, and upwards of 10,000 tons have been sent to the surrounding towns.

Fergus Falls—Lewis Nelson, 72 years old, former county treasurer at Glencoe, Minn., died Saturday in his home here from congestion of the lungs. M. W. Horton, who has been in the painting business here for 39 years, died of pneumonia. He was 69 years old.

Elbow Lake—Another name was added to the list of those who died in the storm when it became known that Dorothy Whitman, aged 14, living on a farm three miles north of Barrett, perished while on her way to the river for a pail of water. Her body was found near her home the following day.

Luverne—Edward Gillham died at his home at the age of 78 years, following a long period of poor health. Mr. Gillham is said to be the first white man who entered this territory in the early days. In 1878 he was elected to the office of sheriff of Rock county and served two terms.

Red Wing—Reorganization of the Red Wing Co-operative Creamery company, into the Red Wing Creamery company, with a capital stock of $30,000 instead of $10,000, was perfected at the annual meeting of the creamery's stockholders. Under the reorganization plan E. W. Redmond, Anoka, and W. E. Redmond, Shakopee, will take over 50 per cent of the stock and the former stockholders of the company the other 50 per cent.

Bemidji—An order denying the petition for the imporvement of the channel of the Red Lake river, as requested by the Red Lake Drainage and conservancy board, has been signed by Judge Andrew Grindeland of Warren and Judge C. W. Stanton of Bemidji. The Red Lake drainage and conservancy project has been in progress for several years and a hearing was held at Thief River Falls recently to determine whether the work should begin on the project as recommended by the engineers.

Hibbing—Hibbing high school basketball five has made a fine record for the season with eleven games played, eight won, and a total score 274 to 138 in their favor. Of the eleven games, two were practice tilts with the alumni, which had no bearing on the district standing. Hibbing will go to the district tournament with but little to fear except Gilbert, which is now heralded as the likely district champion. Hibbing drew Two Harbors as their opponents in the district tournament to be held at Virginia on March 9, 10, 16 and 17.

Windom—Petitions have been circulated in Cottonwood and Jackson counties asking the legislature to pass a law opening up lakes in the state to the public by authorizing the commissioners of a county to lay out roads to a lake that is inaccessible to the public.

Slayton—An electric transmission highpower line will be built from Pipestone to Slayton for the purpose of furnishing this city with electricity. Slayton parties have entered into a contract with the Northern States Power company to have the transmission line constructed.

VICTIM OF HIS OWN ERROR

American Tourist Really Had No Right to Complain of Extortion, Under the Circumstances.

"Ambassador Herrick," said a returned tourist, "told me in Paris that a good deal of the so-called extortion we tourists complain about is due to misunderstandings.

"He instanced the case of a tourist in Brussels who got on a tramcar to make the whole journey round the exterior boulevards. When the conductor asked him where he wanted to go he said:

"'Toute le journee.'

"He thought that this meant, 'The whole journey,' but it really meant, 'All day long'; and so the conductor, putting him down as an eccentric, gave him 15 tickets and charged him 15 francs.

"Fifteen francs! What an extortion! The tourist from that day on couldn't knock Europe and European grafters hard enough."

Where "Flapper" Idea Came From.

It is said that the original flapper was the Haytian girl who adopted short skirts decades ago and who used to "roll her own" as far back as 1915. The girls of that island make regular trips to market and it is their custom to ride on the back of burros. They carry their stockings and slippers under their arms until they reach the outskirts of the city and then as they ride along they don their footwear, the stockings being held in place by a deft twist about the tops just as our girls have been doing lately. As they return home the footwear is removed and laid away.

Movies That Really Are Safe.

A movie picture show in the home, by the aid of a machine which has no more to do with lights or inflammable things than a typewriter or a sewing machine, is an accomplished fact.

The moviescope, the invention of an Englishman, throws pictures on to its marvelous mirror simply by means of ordinary daylight or the artificial light used to illuminate the room.

The pictures are seen with extraordinary clearness. It depends on the viewer—who is also the operator—whether the picture is a slow-motion affair or one of normal movement.

Britain's Arable Area Reduced.

The arable area of Great Britain since 1918 has been continuously reduced. Land now under the plow is not much greater in extent than immediately before the war, according to a report from the board of agriculture. The total area under crops and grass showed less change in 1922 than for several years past, the figures being 26,025,000 acres in 1922, against 26,140,000 in 1921. The arable area, however, was reduced by 308,000 acres, while the permanent grass area was increased by 180,000 acres.

SINGS WITH JOY WHILE AT WORK

Mrs. Banes Says Tanlac Ended Indigestion, Sourness and Palpitations and Made Labors Light.

"Tanlac has helped me so much I wish everyone suffering like I did would follow my suggestion to use it," said Mrs. Sadie Banes, 2037 Washington St., Kansas City, Mo., the other day.

"Before I took Tanlac my appetite was so poor it seemed beyond cultivation, and the little I managed to eat gave me indigestion and caused awful sourness and palpitation. I was simply miserable from nervous headaches, dizziness and knife-like pains in my back, always slept poorly, and felt so bad that at times I just had to quit my housework and lie down.

"Tanlac was so well suited to my case that it has only taken three bottles, half of the full treatment, to restore me to perfect health. It makes me so happy to be without an ache, pain or trouble of any kind that I go about my work humming and singing. I just can't help rejoicing over what Tanlac has done for me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

"ELEGY" WAS WORK OF YEARS

Thomas Gray's Masterpiece Clearly Not the Result of a Moment of Inspiration.

It was eight years from the time Thomas Gray, English poet, began the most famous of all his poems, "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," until he had finished it. He began it in 1742, and it was finished in June, 1750. It attracted so much attention in manuscript that a pirate announced his intention of printing it. This caused Gray to authorize a publisher, to whom he loftily yielded all the profits, to print an edition in 1751. It attracted at once the popularity it has never lost, and was much parodied and imitated throughout the western world.

It was his love of romantic scenery and his morbid temperament which gave Gray his post of eminence among the "Churchyard Poets." He was shrinking and fastidious, and he was also depressed by the standards of his age in respect to poetry. Biographers say that he was indolent and irresolute.

Truth in Ejaculation.

The lumberjack was directed to proceed from camp to the nearest town and arrange for certain supplies. This entailed a long tramp through a forest composed of hemlock. For miles and miles he trudged through a never-ending growth of hemlock. At night he camped. The hemlock was hard to cut, and when it was cut it made a poor fire. Hemlock roots tripped him and boughs of hemlock scratched his face.

So when he finally emerged it was not inappropriate that he remarked: "Gosh all hemlock!"

CHILDLESS HOMES MADE HAPPY

Presence of Little Ones a Great Blessing

Four Interesting Letters

Cortland, N. Y.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was weak and wanted to become strong and have a child. My husband read about it in the 'Cortland Standard' and thought it might help me. It certainly did for I now have a lovely boy fifteen months old who weighs forty pounds. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my friends and you can certainly use my testimonial in your little books and in the newspapers, as it might help to make some other childless home happy by the presence of little ones as it has done mine."—Mrs. CLAUDE P. CANFIELD, 10 Salisbury St., Cortland, N. Y.

A Message to Mothers

Hamilton, Ohio.—"I have known about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound since girlhood, having taken it when I was younger and suffering from a weakness and backache. Lately I have taken it again to strengthen me before the birth of my child, as I was troubled with pains in my back and a lifeless, weak feeling. I think if mothers would only take your wonderful medicine they would not dread childbirth as they do. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to every woman."—Mrs. Jos. FALCOIN, Jr., 552 S. 11th Street, Hamilton, Ohio.

St. Louis, Mo.—"I want to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me seven years ago. I was run down and had a weakness such as women often have. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after being married sixteen years became the mother of a sweet little girl. I now have four lovely children—three fine boys and the little girl six years old. I had longed for children all the while and wept many a day and envied every woman with a child. I was 36 years old when my first baby was born. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is ailing with female weakness."—Mrs. J. NAUMANN, 1517 Benton St., St. Louis, Mo.

Was Weak and Run Down

St. Louis, Mo.—"My mother took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was a girl, and when I was troubled with cramps I took it, and later when I married I again took it to make me strong as the doctor said I was weak and run down and could not have children. I took it and got along fine and now I have three girls. So you know why I keep the Compound in the house. I am a well woman and do my work and sewing too."—Mrs. JULIUS HARTMAN, 2501 W. Dodier St., St. Louis, Mo.

51% Are De Lavals

The overwhelming number of De Laval Cream Separators in use is proved in a striking and forceful way by three recent investigations conducted by disinterested people, covering most of the principal butter-producing states:

(1) From an investigation conducted by the Purdue Agriculturist (Indiana), Iowa Agriculturist, Cornell Countryman (New York), Agricultural Student (Ohio), Penn State Farmer, Tennessee Farmer, published by the students of the various agricultural colleges in question, and their readers, who received the questionnaire, are either graduates or former students:

64.8% use cream separators of the following makes:
50.6%—De Laval.
16.8%—Nearest competitor.

(2) Sixty-two per cent of the cream separators on 388 representative Minnesota dairy farms, selected at random and over a wide area, are De Lavals, according to a survey recently made by The Farmer, of St. Paul.
De Laval—62%.
Nearest competitor—6.4%.

(3) From the Dairy Farm Survey of Hoard's Dairyman (the foremost dairy paper in the world, having a circulation of approximately 85,000 at the time of this investigation).
Have you a cream separator?
80.00%—Yes.
What make?
41.18%—De Laval.
16.74%—Nearest competitor.
51.26%—average number of De Lavals, based on the foregoing, which confirms the well-known statement that there are about as many De Lavals in use as all the rest combined.

The only reason there are so many more De Lavals in use is that it is the best separator—skims cleaner, lasts longer, and is easier to clean and turn.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Lewis Anderson and Lena Anderson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Trust Company, trustee under the last Will and Testament of Patrick F. Lyons, deceased, mortgagees, dated August 20, 1917, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, September 13, 1917, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on Page 231, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of Five thousand dollars ($5000) principal and Three hundred dollars ($300) represented by an interest coupon by said mortgage secured which became due September 1, 1922. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable the sums of Five thousand dollars principal and Three hundred dollars interest coupon with interest upon both amounts at six per cent per annum since September 1, 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice of Five thousand four hundred nineteen and and 25-100 dollars ($5419.25), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Southwest quarter (SW1-4), and the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-eight (158), North of Range Forty-five (45) excepting therefrom two acres described as follows:

Beginning at the Northeast corner of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of said Section twenty-one in said Township and Range, running west five chains, thence south four chains, thence east five chains, thence north four chains to the starting point. All of the above being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Marshall County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Warren in said County and State on the 13th day of March, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $5,419.25 and interest from date of this notice and taxes, if any, and an attorneys fee of One hundred dollars ($100) as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Dated January 16, 1923.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Gangenes, a single man Mortgagor, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation of the State of Minnesota Mortgagee, bearing date the 18th day of October 1918, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of November 1918, at 11:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages, on page 149.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company Mortgagee, to Farmers State Bank of Goodridge by written assignment dated the 30th day of January 1923, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 2nd day of February 1923, at 1 o'clock P. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages on page 110

AND WHEREAS, The said Farmers State Bank of Goodridge the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the 5th day of February 1923, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and purusant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S1-2 NW1-4) and North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N1-2 SW1-4) of Section One (1) in Township One Hundred Fifty-Four (154) North of Range (40) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1923, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Twenty-five and No-100 Dollars, Attorneys fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Obituary

John Udstrand was born in Kvefjord, Norway in 1861 and came to America in 1888 and went to Grand Forks where he staid a short time before moving to Ringbo where he had since made his home among the other early settlers of that neighborhood.

He was united in marriage in 1896 with Amalia Olson of Thoften, Trondeness, Norway.

Mr. Udstrand was taken sick on Dec. 7th. with hypernephroma, and on the 23rd. of that month was moved to the Thief River Falls hospital where his death occurred on Feb. 28th., at the age of 62 years.

The funeral services were held on Saturday at the Ringbo church Rev. Raaum officiating, and interment was made in the cemetery there.

He leaves to mourn his death the bereaved wife, one son, Palmer, and three daughters, Hedlie, Jalma, and Mrs. C. J. Markestad and husband.

The DeLaval is the Most Perfect Skimming Device Ever Made

It is largely because of the scientifically designed, patent-protected bowl that the De Laval Cream Separator skims cleaner, delivers better cream, requires less power and lasts longer. Discs divide the milk into thin layers so that more thorough separation is accomplished at lower speed. They also give the bowl greater capacity for its size than that of any other separator.

Low speed makes possible smoother cream with unbroken fat globules. It combines with a small bowl of large capacity to reduce wear and make less power necessary.

Milk is delivered into the De Laval bowl beyond the wall of separated cream so that there is no re-mixing of milk, cream and skim-milk. This also makes for more thorough separation and greater capacity, and it is one of the reasons why the De Laval separates cream at lower temperatures than any other. The De Laval also delivers a thicker cream with less loss of fat than any other. These are just a few of the features we would like to show you.

A MAN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

Doctor R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, was not only a successful physician, but also a profound student of the medicinal qualities of Nature's remedies, roots and herbs, and by close observation of the methods used by the Indians, he discovered their great remedial qualities, especially for weaknesses of women, and after careful preparation succeeded in giving to the world a remedy which has been used by women with the best results for half a century. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is still in great demand, while many other so called "cure-alls" have come and gone. The reason for its phenomenal success is because of its absolute purity, and Dr. Pierce's high standing as an honored citizen of Buffalo is a guarantee of all that is claimed for the Favorite Prescription as a regulator for the ills peculiar to women.

Modesty.

"My brother," began the serious-minded person, "I have a great task before me."

"What is it?" asked Mr. Dubwaite, suspiciously.

"Uplifting the human race."

"I have no doubt you can do it," replied Mr. Dubwaite, as he edged off, "but I'm such an unimportant member of the human race that I'm sure you'll get no particular credit out of uplifting me."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

DYED HER DRAPERIES, SKIRT AND A SWEATER WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can dye or tint faded, shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, sweaters, stockings, hangings, draperies, everything like new. Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed, even if you have never dyed before. Tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade, or run. So easy to use.—Advertisement.

Air's Coolest Time.

At a height of one and a half miles in the air, the coolest time of the 24 hours is during the day instead of at night, as might be expected.

Many a woman has lived to regret the day when she discovered her affinity.

FRECKLES
March Worst Month for This Trouble—How to Remove Easily.
There's a reason why nearly everybody freckles in March, but happily there is also a remedy for these ugly blemishes, and no one need stay freckled.
Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist and apply a little of it night and morning, and in a few days you should see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the light ones have vanished entirely. Now is the time to rid yourself of freckles, for if not removed now they may stay all summer, and spoil an otherwise beautiful complexion. Your money back if Othine fails.

Washington—The navy entered three flying boats in the competition for the Jacques Schneider aviation marine trophy, valued at 25,000 francs, to be staged near the Isle of Wight next summer. This is the first time the United States has entered the event for the prize offered by the Royal Aero club of France, won last year by the Royal Aero club of Great Britain.

Washington—The United Staes government paid Norway $12,000,000, the amount awarded by the international court of arbitration at the Hague, in settlements of claims growing out of the seizure of Norwegian vessels in the war.

Washington—Secretary of Labor J. J. Davis declined an offer to "star" in a movie production of his book, "The Iron Puddler." Marcus Loewe, motion picture producer, had volunteered to weave a scenario from the book for the films contingent upon Davis acting the hero role.

Washington—Damages amounting to $20,000 are sought in a suit filed in the District of Columbia supreme court against Senator T. H. Caraway of Arkansas by Harry A. Wallerstein, a veteran bureau employee, for injuries alleged to have been sustained in a clash on a street hero several days ago. The encounter grew out of an argument on a streetcar.

Washington—The nation's sweet tooth has grown enormously as measured by the manufacture of confections and ice cream, the total value of which was more than $500,000,000 in 1921, according to statistics made public by the census bureau.

Washington — Secretary Herbert Hoover has accepted an invitation to address the National League of Women Voters in its fourth annual convention at Des Moines, Iowa, April 9-14, the league announced.

Washington—The sword carried by General Richard Montgomery of the Continental army when he was killed in an unsuccessful attack on the defenses of Quebec, Dec. 31, 1775, was transferred to the national museum in behalf of its owner, Miss Julia Barton Hunt, whose family owned Montgomery place on the Hudson, where General Montgomerys' wife died.

Domestic

New York—Supreme Court Justice Guy approved incorporation of the Carnegie Endowment in Europe, Inc., designed "to hasten abolition of international war and to encourage peaceful settlement of international differences."

Lexington, Ky.—Warren Middleton, Paducah, Ky., a student at the University of Kentucky, was indicted for the killing of Joseph Self, nightwatchman at the university.

Marion Ill.—Completion of the jury in the second Herrin mine riots trial was possible when court reconvened here. Eight jurors have been chosen.

New York—A billion nickels were paid into the elevated and subway turnstiles of the Interborough Rapid Transit company in 1922. A report showed its mileage had more than doubled since 1905, and that its passenger traffic had tripled in that same period.

New York—Captain Arthur Tod Hudgins who piloted the first steamer through the Panama canal, died.

Caspera, Wyo.—The body of Roy Carey, aged 8, for whom 338 Boy Scouts of Casper carried on an organized search, was found frozen in the ice of a small pond within a block of his home.

Chicago—On the door of a downtown office building suite appears the lettering "Ford Presidential Club of Illinois headquarters, national committee, county central committee." In charge was Patrick E. McDonnell, 12th ward republican, formerly connected with Mayor W. H. Thompson's organization.

Chicago—A campaign for a $1,000,000 fund to assist Eamon deValera and the faction in Ireland which is demanding the establishment of a republic, was launched at a meeting of delegates from several states.

Chicago—A move was inaugurated here to have 1,000 American business men send 1000 letters and cablegrams to the president and parliament of France, urging them to change their attitude toward Germany and give that country the same terms of payment of reparations as the United States has extended to Great Britain in the debt owed this country.

New York—The Clyde liner, Lenape outbound to Charleston, S. C., and the Southern Pacific freighter, El Sud, in bound from Galveston, were damaged in a collision in the North river.

Ozark, Ark.—Four members of the Denning local of the United Mine Workers of America have been indicted by the circuit court grand jury here on a charge of violating the black list statute of Arkansas as a result of the expulsion from the union of three men for alleged membership in the Ku Klux Klan, according to an announcement made by the clerk of the court.

New Orleans—New Orleans firemen tackled and bested something new in their experience when they extinguished a fire aboard the United Fruit company's big passenger liner Abangarez, in port here. The vessel, as is the custom at the end of a voyage from the tropics, was being fumigated with cyanide gas when the gas containers burst into flames. A fireboat and six fire companies were called.

Boston—Charles Ponzi, who has served 27 months of a five year sentence for using the mails to defraud in his international postal coupon swindle, has applied for clemency and commutation. United States Attorney Robert O. Harris received from Washington Ponzi's petition based on ill health. The prisoner returned two days ago to Plymouth jail after an operation at a hospital here for stomach trouble.

New York—Despondent because his brother gave away their pet bulldog, Nicholas Apostle, partner in a tailoring business here, hurried to Niagara Falls, leaped into the cataract and was swept to death.

Sporting

Washington—The advance training squad of the Washington American league baseball club, including five players and Owen Bush, the new manager are leaving for the spring training camp at Tampa, Florida. About ten more players will join them at Tampa a day or two after their arrival.

Chicago—Applications of three baseball players for reinstatement to the active list of organized ball were granted by Baseball Commissioner Landis. The men are Robert G. Harmon, who was on the voluntary retired list of the Pittsburgh Nationals; Gale Staley, voluntarily retired by the Cincinnati Nationals, and W. W. Kinney, who was on the ineligible list of the Philadelphia Americans, because of deserting the club in 1920.

St. Paul—St. Paul's fighting middleweights, Jock Malone and Mike O'Dowd, may try to settle supremacy in their own backyard after all. The pair, matched to box in January, failed to see action when Malone injured one of his hands. Malone, after a rest, took on Johnny Klesch, Cleveland, in East Chicago, winning by a technical kayoe in the sixth round. The bout proved to Malone and also his manager, Tommy Walsh, that his dukes are ready for hard usage.

Foreign

Cherbourg—Andre Maneyrol, holder of the motorless airplane duration flight record, established a new distance record by gliding 6.21 miles.

Fankhanel, former business man and for several years assessor, and E. Aamodt, present incumbent, will oppose Miss Marth's election.

Clara City—The farm home Eno Christians in Crate township was destroyed by fire last night, causing a loss of about $1,500. The fire is thought to have been of incendiary origin.

Carver—The Carver Commercial club was host at a community gathering to 4,000 farmers in appreciation of their trade with merchants. J. T. McCarthy and H. B. Myers of the state dairy and food commission, and J. J. Farrell of St. Paul were the principal speakers. O. C. Brunrus, president of the Carver Commercial club, presided.

Virginia—There are few districts in St. Louis county which do not boast a Sunday school due to the efforts of Rev. J. Lloyd Hunter, missionary in St. Louis county for the American Sunday School union. In the last five years he has organized 50 Sunday schools with a total enrollment of more than 2,000.

Moose Lake—The growth of the Moose Lake region in dairying and the general advancement of farming are reflected in the annual report of the Moose Lake creamery, which shows an increase of 11 per cent in the quantity of butter made and shipped during the last year, as compared to the previous 12 months.

St. Cloud—Plans have been started by the St. Cloud council, United Commercial Travelers, for entertaining 2,500 salesmen at the annual meeting of the grand council of Minnesota and North Dakota, which will be conducted in this city, June 7, 8 and 9. There will be a baseball tournament of council teams throughout the district and a musical contest between the bands of the districts.

Duluth—The efforts of the village of Hibbing to take out of court the application of the mining interests for an order to vacate the north 40 was halted by a decision in which District Judge H. A. Dancer ruled that the court had jurisdiction and power to make such an order. The village of Hibbing and property owners had interposed objections to the jurisdiction of the court in the matter. Judge Dancer set the hearing on the order to vacate the plat for March 12.

Fergus Falls—A five day merchants institute will be conducted in this city and a style show is planned for March 14. Frank Stockdale, one of the foremost authorities in the United States on business methods, will conduct the institute the first three days and Stanley L. Krebs, who is noted as an expert of salesmanship, advertising and scientific management of men will direct the school the remaining two days.

Baker—A coroner's jury here returned a verdict stating the death of Louis Getz, his wife and two children was due to a "fire caused by an explosion of unknown origin." Testimony indicated Getz might have started a fire in the kitchen stove with kerosene, which, when analyzed, was found to contain about 10 per cent gasoline. Pieces of the kitchen stove were found scattered about in the wreckage, indicating an explosion, and witnesses living near the Getz home testified they heard two muffled explosions.

Willmar—A farmer's co-operative elevator will be erected at Lake Lilian, the new station on the Luce Electric line in Kandiyohi county. A co-operative association has been formed and a committee of six men appointed to solicit shares and draw up the articles of incorporation.

Waseca—The Waseca school board sold $350,000 worth of bonds, recently voted by this city to build a new high school, to Wells-Dickey Co. of Minneapolis. The bonds were auctioned off, there being several bidders. The issue bears 4½ per cent interest and sold at a premium of $700.

> "DEAD—WHY—HOW?"
>
> John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga, and to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. With his friend, Pelt, a newspaper man, Bartley goes to Circle Lake, the pair becoming the guests of Bob Currie, an old friend. The three visit the Slyke home. Slyke resents Bartley's coming, saying he is satisfied the two men in prison are guilty. Bartley is not. Next morning Slyke is found dead in bed, apparently having shot himself. Miss Potter, the dead man's sister-in-law, the village police chief, Roche, and the family physician, Doctor King, all agree Slyke killed himself, but Bartley insists he was murdered. Investigating, Bartley finds evidence that Slyke, after a card party he had given, was shot on the tower of the house, undressed, and placed in bed. During his absence from the room someone removes the revolver from Slyke's hand. A boy working in the garage asserts he heard a shot during the night, apparently "in the air," of course really on the tower.

I scanned the two cards he gave me and then those on the table. The pack was an ordinary one, such as is sold for a dollar. Not only the designs on the backs were the same, but the texture of the cardboards as well.

"Do you realize what that shows?" asked Bartley.

"That the cards we found in the tower are from the pack on this table."

"Yes! They may have been dropped up there by the murderer, or they may have been placed there to make us believe that someone in the poker party had committed the crime."

"Why couldn't it have been done," I suggested, "by someone in the party?"

He was thoughtful for a second or two, then slowly shook his head. "Of course, it might have been, but I think that the odds are against it. This is no ordinary crime, though some one wanted us to think it was a commonplace suicide. The criminal was afraid, however, that we might discover it to be murder and prepared for that emergency."

"How do you make that out?" I asked, astonished.

"An ordinary criminal"—Bartley spoke so softly that Miss Potter could not hear—"would never have taken all the trouble involved in undressing Slyke and placing him in bed. That was intended to give the idea of suicide; but, as the murderer knew there was a chance of some one suspecting that it was murder, he took the cards from the table and placed them where we could find them. He knew that the finding of cards in the tower would throw suspicion upon everyone present at the game. It is to me only an additional link in evidence that proves it was not suicide."

Roche returned, bringing with him the butler, three women and a boy. None of them could give us any information of value. Bartley soon dismissed them.

After they had gone, Bartley turned to the boy who, from the excited way he was wriggling, evidently wanted to say something. It came out with an eagerness that was almost laughable.

"I heard a gun last night," he cried.

"You did?" asked Bartley, startled for a second.

The boy nodded eagerly.

"Yes, sir. Last night, sir."

Bartley placed his hand on the boy's shoulder. "Where were you when you heard the shot? What time was it?"

"Well, sir," the boy began, "you see, I work out in the garage, wash the cars and such things. I sleep over it and eat in the kitchen. Last night, you know, we had the big car out to take some of the gentlemen home that were at the card party. When the chauffeur got back I washed the car."

The chauffeur? We stared inquiringly at each other, and Bartley said sharply to Roche, "Where is he?"

Roche looked confused and shamefaced, then hurried from the room, and Bartley resumed his examination of the boy.

"You said you were washing the car. What then?"

"Yes, sir. I was washing the car. It was after twelve o'clock and it took some time. Then I smoked a cigar a man had given me and went to bed. Just after I crawled in, about half-past one, I guess, I heard a shot. Not very loud, but it was a shot, all right."

"Where did it seem to come from?" Bartley asked.

The boy scratched his head for a moment and looked a bit foolish as he replied. "It's funny, but it seemed to be up in the air near the house."

Bartley threw me a quick glance. This fitted in with his theory that Slyke had been killed on the balcony of the tower. If that theory was right and the shot that the boy had heard was the one that had killed Slyke, he would naturally think that the sound came from the air. I wondered if the boy could tell us anything else of value.

"Did you get out of bed to see if you could discover where the shot came from?"

"No, sir, I did not; but, if I had known that Mr. Slyke had killed himself, you bet your life I would."

From his answer I judged that the servants did not yet know that their employer had been murdered. At least, this boy did not know. He had told us all he knew about the crime, and was soon sent from the room. Only Miss Potter and the butler now remained to be examined.

Roche returned, looking more shamefaced than ever. "I'm sorry, Mr. Bartley, but I can't find him. No one has seen the chauffeur, and he doesn't seem to be anywhere about the place."

Bartley accepted his statement with a shrug of disappointment, and turned his attention to the butler.

He was a man of about fifty-five, tall, with a rather thin face of the unemotional kind common to butlers. Though he refused to meet Bartley's eyes, he did not seem to be in the least nervous. What had taken place that night he evidently accepted as something he could not help and need not worry over.

Bartley asked him first about the men that were at the card party. To my surprise the butler said he was unable to give the names of all the men, though he knew most of them.

Bartley took down in a little red notebook the names of such men as he could remember. Then he asked suddenly, "And what was the name of the man that stayed after the others left?"

The question seemed to surprise the butler, but he answered, "Mr. Lawrence, sir, the lawyer from Saratoga. Mr. Slyke asked him himself to remain after the others had gone. He went with him up to Mr. Slyke's room and stayed there a few moments. I myself waited here in a chair to let him out and lock up. I did not have to wait long; not more than ten minutes or so."

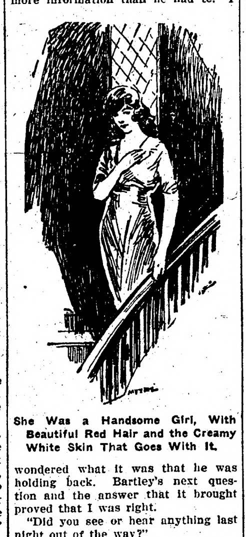
Bartley glanced at the stairs. "Did Mr. Slyke come down with Mr. Lawrence?" he asked.

"No, sir. I never saw Mr. Slyke again." He paused, then added slowly, "That is, alive."

"And you did not hear the revolver shot, the one the boy heard?"

"No, sir, I did not."

I felt that he was carefully choosing his words and was not giving any more information than he had to. I wondered what it was that he was holding back. Bartley's next question and the answer that it brought proved that I was right.



She Was a Handsome Girl, With Beautiful Red Hair and the Creamy White Skin That Goes With It.

"Did you see or hear anything last night out of the way?"

The butler was so long in answering that the question had to be asked a second time.

We were getting impatient before he said, "I heard nothing suspicious, but I saw—"

He paused, and Bartley urged, "You saw what?"

The butler glanced from Bartley to the woman in the chair. Miss Potter was looking at him with a curious expression on her face, one not of fear but of wonder, as if she were curious to know what his statement meant.

After glancing at her, he turned to Bartley and said apologetically, "Why, sir, I don't know if what I saw was anything out of the way. I would not have thought of it again if Mr. Slyke had not been found dead. When I got to bed, I began to wonder if I had locked the windows. We were rather fussy about them since the robbery. The more I thought of it the less sure I was; so I got up and was starting to go down into the living room when I saw Miss Ruth, dressed in a long coat, going into her room."

Miss Potter gasped and asked the butler in great astonishment, "But, Robert, how can you say that! You know Miss Ruth was not at home last evening. She spent the night at Saratoga. She has not returned yet."

For a second no one spoke. Bartley's eyes went from the butler to the woman and back again. We all wondered what his next question would be, but we never found out. Suddenly, from above us, a girlish voice called, "Who is talking about me?"

Astonished, we all turned and looked in the direction from which the voice had come. On the top of the stairway a young girl of nineteen years stood looking down at us.

For several seconds Miss Potter seemed unable to believe her eyes, then she half gasped, "Why, Ruth—"

The girl, surprised at the effect her simple question had made, clutched her blue silk dressing gown closer about her and started down the stairs. It was plain that she had just gotten out of bed and had not yet had time to dress. Her eyes went from one person to another questioningly. Who were we, and what were we doing here?

As she came slowly down the steps we watched her in silence. She was a handsome girl with beautiful red hair and the creamy white skin that goes with it. When she reached her aunt's side, Miss Potter was still too astonished to speak and the girl gave Roche an appealing look. She was beginning to realize that something was wrong.

"Have the burglars been here again?" she asked.

Not trusting herself to speak, Miss Potter shook her head. The girl knew nothing of the tragedy that had taken place, evidently, or she would not have been so carefree. She waited, and as her aunt did not seem able to tell her what had happened she turned again to Roche. After swallowing hard for a moment or two the chief stammered out, "Why, Miss Ruth, you see, we—that is—well, Mr. Slyke has been killed."

The laughing look in her eyes faded and one of surprise, blended with horror, took its place. For a second, that to me seemed an hour, she waited, steadying herself by her hand on the table. Then she asked slowly, almost spelling out each word, "De-ad—dead—why—how?"

Again a silence. No one wanted to tell her what had taken place. Her eyes sought each one of us in turn and then rested on Bartley, as if she recognized that he was in charge. A glance passed between the two, then he told her what we had found.

Though the girl had been startled, I noticed that she was not overwhelmed with grief. Neither had the older woman been. In fact we had yet to hear any word of regret that Slyke was dead. That the girl's astonishment at Bartley's story had been genuine there was no doubt; still the butler's assertion that he had seen her go into her room when she was supposed to have been away from the house had to be explained. Her unexpected presence here this morning seemed to add color to his statement. A glance at her dressing gown with her nightdress peeping beneath it showed that she had just come from her bed. Yet her aunt's surprise at her appearance had also seemed genuine.

"Your aunt told us," Bartley said to her, "that you were away, spending the night with a friend; but the butler says he saw you early this morning going into your own room."

The girl flushed, as if she realized the gravity of her position, and sank into a chair before she answered, "I did intend to spend the night with a friend in Saratoga. On our way home from a dance at the lake our machine lost a tire and it took so long to replace it that, as we were near the house I decided to come home. Not wishing to go through the woods alone at that hour, I got Uncle Richard to come with me."

Seeing that we were puzzled by the mention of her uncle, she explained that he was really a cousin of her stepfather whom she called uncle. He was a retired clergyman who, during the summer, lived on the estate in a little cottage facing the main road near the entrance to the driveway to the house. When asked if her uncle had come into the house with her she replied that he had not; that he had only waited long enough for her to unlock the front door. She herself had gone directly to her own room, passing the door of her stepfather's room, which had been closed. She had seen no one and heard nothing. She had slept until our voices had awakened her.

KICKS HELPLESS MAN IN CHAINS

Former Steward of Ocean Liner Testifies in Court Against Captain of Ship.

MANACLES CUT FLESH

Asserts Captain Told Him He Intended Inflicting Beatings on "Lazy Worker"—Injuries Result in Man's Death.

New York.—A tale of the sea rivaling "Treasure Island" in dramatic detail was told in Federal court when Emil Stoar, former assistant steward on the President Van Buren, described how he had seen George H. Miles, captain of the ship, kick H. G. Baxter, a pantryman, causing injuries which, it is charged, resulted in his death.

Miles is being tried for murder on the high seas, alleged to have been committed last June, before Judge Francis A. Winslow and a jury.

Chained to Bulkhead.

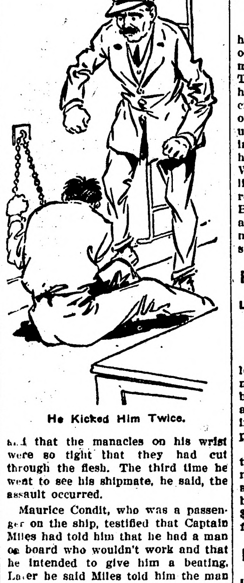
"I was going down the iron ladder into hold 10 to see Baxter, who was handcuffed and chained to a bulkhead, when I saw that Captain Miles was there ahead of me," Stoar said. "He made some remark to Baxter—I couldn't hear what it was—and then I saw him kick Baxter as he lay there helpless. He kicked him twice.

"I didn't dare say anything. I was afraid if I did the captain would take me for mutiny. When I saw what he did to Baxter I was so sickened I could hardly crawl back up the ladder."

Under questioning by Carleton Goldthwaite, assistant United States attorney, Stoar said Baxter had fainted at his work a few hours after he came aboard the ship. Later he said the first officer and the pantryman "had some words" over Baxter shirking his work.

Manacles Cut Flesh.

Stoar testified that the falling out with the mate resulted in Baxter being handcuffed and chained in the hold. He said he visited Baxter twice and that the manacles on his wrist were so tight that they had cut through the flesh. The third time he went to see his shipmate, he said, the assault occurred.



He Kicked Him Twice.

Maurice Condit, who was a passenger on the ship, testified that Captain Miles had told him that he had a man on board who wouldn't work and that he intended to give him a beating. Later he said Miles told him the man was dead.

HEART BEATS AFTER DEATH

Throbs for Forty Minutes When Short Illness Is Fatal to California Girl.

Dolondo, Cal.—Upon contention of her physicians, who declare the girl's heart beat for 40 minutes after she was pronounced dead, an autopsy will be performed on the body of Miss Izette McCameron, fifteen years old. Physicians refused to sign a death certificate until an examination is made.

The girl became ill at school and stopped breathing in a few hours. Her heart continued to beat for fully 40 minutes, attending physicians declare.

Six-Foot Snake Defies Traffic "Cop."

New York.—A six-foot snake was killed when it refused to stop for a traffic policeman. Traffic was suspended when the reptile appeared. Women screamed. Men rushed from sidewalks. Motorists leaped from cars. The policemen took his club and beat it to death. The snake was white with green stripes.

ROAD BUILDING

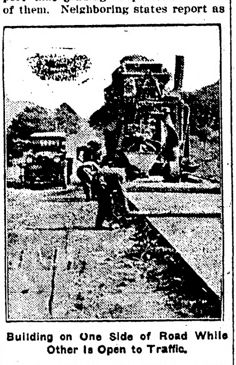
LENGTH OF WORKING SEASON

Most Important Factor in Road Construction—There Is Considerable Variation.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The length of the working season is a most important element in road construction and one in which there is considerable variation, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, which has collected data from all of the states.

Deducting Sundays only there are 313 working days in the year, and Alabama, Mississippi and New Mexico report that grading is possible on 300 of them. Neighboring states report as follows: Florida, 265; Louisiana, 260, and Texas, 275. Contrasted with these are Maine, with 110; New York, 150; Wisconsin, 153, and western Oregon, 100. In 14 states grading will probably be impractical after the middle of November, and in some of them at an earlier date.



Building on One Side of Road While Other Is Open to Traffic.

Gravel surfacing can be placed in most of the states on from 120 to 200 working days, although 10 of them report a greater number.

In 26 states concrete surfacing can be placed on from 100 to 150 days, and in 16 states on from 150 to 200 days. In 28 states the season is generally over by November 1.

FINE STREET-PAVING RECORD

Total of 150 Miles Completed in City of Birmingham During the Year of 1922.

The street-paving record of Birmingham for the year 1922 is a gratifying one. A total of a hundred and fifty miles of paving has been completed. The nearly $800,000 invested could not have been spent in a better cause. The city as a whole has reached that stage of highway construction where continuous travel east, west, north or south inside the city limits over smooth and hard-surfaced thoroughfare is possible. Within another year the connecting links with the outlying suburbs still required for completion of the Greater Birmingham highway system will probably have been finished and the city may then look with real pride on her system of streets.

FINE HIGHWAY IN TENNESSEE

Largest Contract Ever Let in State Calls for Construction of 50 Miles of Road.

The largest highway contract ever let in Tennessee provides for 50.2 miles of new road in Grainger county, beginning at Fate Springs, 48 miles across Hawkins county and two miles in Sullivan county extending to Kingsport.

The new highway passes through the Holstein river valley for about 40 miles and lies between Bay mountain and Clinch mountain. The road will be surfaced with asphalt and will cost $1,887,000, or $27,700 a mile. It is a federal route.

HIGHWAY BUILDING IN TEXAS

Leads All Other States in Matter of Construction, Having Added 933 Miles.

Texas led all other states in the matter of road building in 1922, having added 933 miles during the year. The average for all states was 200 miles. Sometimes it is a good idea to stop planning what we're going to do just for a moment in order to contemplate what we have accomplished. Five years of this sort of progress and traveling salesmen will be the envy of all who know the joy of a good car and a good road.

Roads With Banked Curves.

Highway engineers in England are constructing roads with an allowance for super-elevation on corner curves wherever desirable. French road engineers long ago adopted the banked curve, and in some parts of the United States they are now in use.

Would Color Highways.

In England, the suggestion has been made that the public highways be colored by means of some cheap chemical spray which would make them less tiring to the eyes of motor drivers.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

HELP YOURSELF

EVERYTHING beneath the sun is available to the deserving, so reach out your hands and help yourself.

To be worthy you should be patient, industrious, persevering, charitable toward the weak, respectful to the strong.

You must overcome foolish pride and envy; be not afraid to soil your hands, but a veritable coward when it comes to the point where you are called upon to smudge your soul.

Go forth with a heart full of faith and a joyous counte ce.

Do not grumble if you happen to be in the lower ranks.

Think of the great men of today who came up from humble places and won distinction, whose names are written across the lands and seas in flaming letters.

Hold faith high above your head. Let its unfailing torch illuminate your path all through life, and march on assured that the goal you have set your heart upon is just ahead.

Do not falter if your road should be difficult and your burden wearisome.

Difficulties are common obstacles No one can get anything worth while without overcoming them.

Affluence and power have their beginning in small things, both capable of being won by well directed thought and effort.

They belong to the capable who are qualified to use them in the right way, not to the doubting, inefficient and wavering, but to the courageous, the steadfast, who never admit defeat nor turn their faces in the darkest hour from the sun of faith, shining always on every cross and care.

If you would help yourself to the best there is, keep track of your faults. If inclined to procrastinate, take a lesson from the tides, the revolving earth, never delaying or hurrying.

Be methodical, even though it may in the present day of haste and confusion, be considered old-fashioned.

Train your mind to remember what your eyes see; keep your brain sensitized so that the impressions made upon it shall become permanent pictures to which you can turn when they may be needed.

Only what you can recollect in the vital moment is of any use to you, and in that moment if you should fail to remember, your whole future might be blighted.

Life Is Love and Laughter

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LIFE is love and laughter,
Life is smile and song,
Heaven ever after,
Heaven all along.
Joy within, without, you,
What the weather be,
If you look about you—
Lift your eyes and see.

Life is sun and singing,
Life is a delight,
Every morning bringing
Azure after night.
If you will but take it,
Life is Arcady;
Life is what you make it—
Lift your eyes and see!

Life is loving, living,
Life the common road,
Life is getting, giving,
Helping with the load.
There are brothers near you,
Sweet comraderie;
Friends are here to cheer you—
Lift your eyes and see.

Life is loving, lifting,
Life is hand-in-hand.
Are you only drifting?
Do you understand?
Love has never found you?—
Then a brother be!
Love is all around you—
Lift your eyes and see!

BIT OF OLD CIVILIZATION

Ancient Temple Proves Art of Forgotten Race—Discoveries of Interest to Archeologists.

A faint glimpse of a civilization so long forgotten that no memory of it exists except in a temple of gigantic proportions and some inscriptions giving the names of kings was given in a talk on "The Mysterious Temple of Angkor Wat in Cambodia" by Langdon Warner at the University museum, reports the Philadelphia Ledger.

The lecturer showed pictures of the temple and surrounding country and explained that it was possible to go up the side porches and finally into some of the corridors of the temple itself without getting off one's elephant, if taking that mode of exercise, so large and spacious are the apartments and approaches to them.

The Cambodians originally came from southern India, during the first four centuries after Christ, bringing with them a wealth of Indian traditions, which is evident from the worship of Siva and Vishnu. The native Cambodians know nothing of their ancestors who built the temple, and explain the existence of these buildings as being the work of the gods.

There are civilizations much earlier than that of Cambodia of which much more perfect records exist, the lecturer said, and the reason that archeologists are delving into the mysteries of Cambodia is the strong evidence of there having lived in that section a highly cultured race, so far as culture may be interpreted by the fine arts. "We know nothing of their cruelties and the injustice of their social system, their filth and folly," he said, "because such things perish with the passing of the centuries, but their knowledge of architecture and their artistic skill was remarkable."

Wizardry in Plants.

Luther Burbank spake and said to himself, Lo, what profiteth a wheat stack a cubit tall and only four inches of it wheat? So he has developed, we read, a wheat stalk with head a foot in length and grains of wheat as large as beans. As a horticulturist and husbandman, he is a magician. He does not rub Aladdin's lamp, he is the genie of the lamp himself.

If wheat grains as large as beans, why not, after a while, as large as peanuts? "In those days there were giants;" in our day agriculture has produced the gigantic. Any county fair will prove it. Pumpkins grown to the size of Cinderella's coach and apples of a magnitude suitable to the Greek goddesses who fought over one.

Two bites of a cherry is only a proverb. The fact has made it quite possible; and as for strawberries they are now built with a leanto. Yes, a strawberry of the newest pattern has lobes, and a single plant has sold for $50,000.

The vegetable world, compared to its former fruitfulness, now brings forth some twenty, some forty and some an hundred fold. We never fear for the food supply of the world, so long as there are Luther Burbanks amongst us.

Airplane Warning Signal.

The purpose of an automatic signal device, recently invented, is to give warning of the approach of an airplane, which usually descends to the ground with engine shut off, to persons who may be on the landing field. The device, according to an illustrated article in Popular Mechanics, is provided with suitable levers and rods so as to be under the control of the pilot, and is mounted on a bracket within the fuselage and arranged to be swung out through an opening when it is desired to signal. The force of the air passing in through the bell-shaped mouth of the horn rotates an air motor that can be adapted to drive a siren or other type of signal.

Assuredly Russian.

The fair young thing tripped into the public library and said she would like to get a certain book but couldn't remember its name. She knew it was a Russian novel, however, and the attendant obligingly named a number of Russian novels. But this didn't bring the answer. So the fair young thing pondered.

"I know it's a Russian novel," musingly.

"Yes, miss."

"But what is it? Oh, goody! Now I have it," she declared.

"And the name?"

"Martin Chuzzlewitz."

Tried and Condemned.

Grandma, having arrived for her annual visit to the city, had Bluebelle, the flapper of the family, on the carpet. The young lady was uneasy, but the ordeal had to be gone through with.

"That skirt—"

The good old lady had to pause for breath.

"Now, grandma—"

"It's entirely too short," declared grandma. "As for your cheeks—"

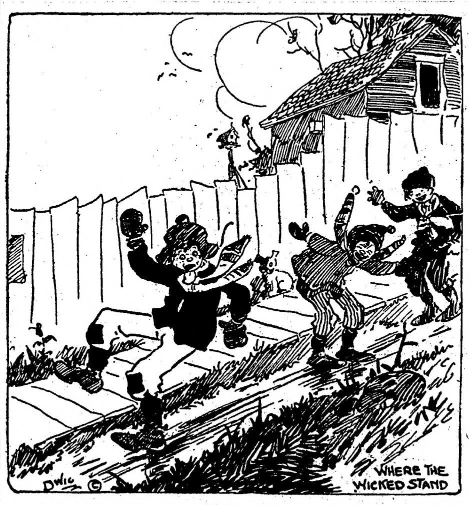
Here the old lady snorted.

"No wonder you are wearing a permanent blush."

Zachariah Boils It Down.

The new clerk of the Indiana Supreme court, Zachariah T. Dungan, believes in brevity, so has changed his name on official state documents to plain Zach. A friend of Mr. Dungan from Huntington, his home town, says Zach is so all-fired pleasing and accommodating that he feared his many new acquaintances at the statehouse would stagger under the effort to pronounce his name correctly, which explains the use of the cleaver on his name.—Indianapolis News.

SCHOOL DAYS



Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

WISE ADVICE

IT WAS Publius Syrus who said, "Look for a tough wedge for a rough log"—wise and sound advice.

Men prosper better who suit their tools to the job. It is foolish to drive nails with a sledge hammer, or to try to drive piles with a mallet.

The first uses up twenty times as much energy as is necessary; the second accomplishes nothing.

When you see in a legislature or a political meeting an orator tearing the air into tatters over a very small and unimportant matter, you feel that he is using a sledge hammer to drive a nail.

When you see a man in an office employing three times the energy necessary to do a very small and unimportant job, you know that he is doing the same thing.

Save your important weapons for important battles. Don't hunt rabbits with machine guns.

If you have a big task to do, bend to it all your energies. Use the biggest weapons you have.

But on the little jobs save your energy.

We have seen legislators who made motions to adjourn as if they were engaged in a debate over the fate of the nation. We have known architects who planned as elaborately for the construction of a one-car garage as better architects would plan for a skyscraper.

Neither got much but ridicule for his efforts.

Save your energies for the big jobs that will come. You will need them all then—all your thought, all your effort, all your skill.

For the little jobs use just enough of these to do them well—don't skimp them—but don't over-do on them.

You have a mental tool chest which you will soon learn how to employ wisely. Make careful selections before you do your work, and it will be done better and with less expense of time and energy.

Has Anyone Laughed At You Because—

By ETHEL R. PEYSER

You are quiet in a crowd?

Haven't you suffered torture to see others get away "with murder," while you are scared pink to say anything at all? Haven't you often longed to say something to make the bunch laugh? Haven't you wondered why you were included so often in the doings when you were so quiet and every one said, "Speak up, who's going to hurt you?" Cheer up, if you haven't got anything to say. Keep still. Too many spoil the air saying stupid stuff, or bad stuff, or hurtful stuff. It is good to be able to be amusing; there is nothing more wonderful than to amuse. But how many do anything when they sputter, but confuse? They say still waters run deep. You may be interesting for this reason.

SO

Your get-away is:

You have as much right to speak as anyone else—but if you've nothing to say you are right to "shut up."

Uncomfortable Magnificence.

There's not a place in earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,

FOOD FOR THE HOUSEHOLD

WHEN the chicken for Sunday dinner has served the family, remove all the bits of leftover meat from the roasted chicken and cut fine. Prepare a white or brown sauce, season well, add the chicken, a teaspoonful of onion juice, any good stock like chicken or cream, cook thick, and the crumbled yolks of two hard cooked eggs and a half cupful of cooked peas, if at hand. Serve poured over buttered toast.

Grape Juice Dessert.

Take twelve almond macaroons, one cupful of grape juice, one cupful of cold cooked custard, one cupful of whipped cream, two tablespoonfuls of blanched almonds broken into small pieces. Place two fresh macaroons in each sherbet cup, pour over a small amount of grape juice, set on ice until chilled, put a small portion of custard over each, then the whipped cream, sprinkle over the almonds and serve at once.

Apricot Tart.

Cook, drain and pass through a colander enough dried apricots to make one and one-half cupfuls of pulp, add to the pulp three tablespoonfuls of orange juice and pour into a baked pastry shell. Cover two dozen halves of apricots with warm water and let stand on hour. Place over a slow fire and cook until tender but not too soft. Cover the pulp with the halves of apricot, hollow side up; in each hollow place a blanched almond and cover with a jelly made by thickening the apricot juice with gelatine.

Smithsonian Getting Ready for Gifts

HARRIS & EWING

Charles D. Walcott has been secretary of the Smithsonian institution since 1907 and has been identified with the national museum for years. He's an author, has a string of titles as long as a comet's tail and has so many friends that the following was passed by the senate the other day:

"The Regents of the Smithsonian institution are authorized to prepare preliminary plans, to be approved by the commission of fine arts, for a suitable fireproof building with granite fronts for the National Gallery of Art, including the National Portrait Gallery and the history collection of the United States National museum, said buildings to be erected when funds from gifts or bequests are in the possession of the said Regents, in sections or completely on the north side of the Mall between the Natural History building, United States National museum, and Seventh street, leaving a space between it and the latter of not less than 100 feet, and a space of not less than 100 feet between it and Seventh street, with its south front on a line with the south front of the said Natural History building."

In other words Mr. Walcott and the Smithsonian institution have an idea that some of their many friends are going to make them a present and want to be ready to accept it.

Degoutte's Poor Opinion of Germans

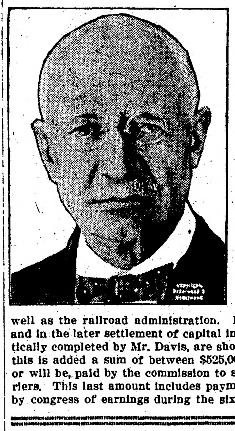
Here is an up-to-date portrait of General Degoutte, commander of the French army of occupation in the Ruhr region of Germany. The French general seems to have a single-track mind. Anyway, he apparently knows what he is in the Ruhr for and what he intends to do. Commenting on the situation, he said, among other things:

"Right and might are ours, and we shall win. We occupied the Ruhr without shedding a drop of blood. We have allowed the population full liberty; we are not crushing the country under requisitions, but we want to get paid, and we shall be paid.

"We are getting ahead in organizing the region. The Germans may sneer, but we can stand an idle Ruhr longer than they can. Chancellor Cuno declares our aim is the economic destruction of Germany. Our aim is much simpler. We want redress; we want Germany to honor her signature. The economic ruin of Germany would prevent her from paying us.

"I solemnly warn Germany if she forces another battle on us she will not stay our hands by crying 'Kamerad!' It will be a fight to the finish—a complete knockout."

Uncle Sam as a Railroad Conductor



Losses sustained by the government from war-time operation of railroads and its aftermath of earnings guarantees and damage settlements will total approximately $1,800,000,000, according to data made available in a report by James C. Davis, former director general of railroads, transmitted to congress by President Harding. Not only does the amount come within congressional appropriations already made, but there will also be a return to the treasury of about $400,000,000 in cash and railroad securities.

Mr. Davis' estimates are based on the showing actually made in liquidation of accounts between the government and corporate owners of 80 per cent of the railroad mileage which the government took over.

Accounting in connection with the government operation has gone through three phases, and involves the interstate commerce commission as well as the railroad administration. Losses in direct operation of the roads and in the later settlement of capital investment and other claims, as now practically completed by Mr. Davis, are shown to reach a total of $1,250,000,000. To this is added a sum of between $525,000,000 and $600,000,000, which has been, or will be, paid by the commission to short line railroads and to class one carriers. This last amount includes payment under the guarantee given the roads by congress of earnings during the six months of 1920.

Woman Leader Tells of Big Bribe Offer

Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, charged before the Minnesota State federation that she had been offered $250,000 to go to Washington and work for "a certain bill."

She has the offer in writing, she says, but she declined to tell who made it or what the bill was about. Besides offering her $250,000, she said, the unknown individual tried to bribe the whole federation with an offer to finance the erection of a general federation headquarters building in Washington.

"I shan't tell you who made the offer," she declared. "I'd be a fool if I did."

Mrs. Winter said she had not disclosed the attempt at bribery before because she did not consider it an "ethical thing to do." The would-be donor, she said, apparently had no idea that there was any irregularity about this offer. "I spoke out," she added, "because I felt that it was high time the club women were warned against such attempts."

Mrs. Winter volunteered the information that she received the offer early last summer, shortly before the general federation meeting at Chautauqua, N. Y.

"I replied that the federation did not support any measure for advantages that might accrue to the organization or its officers, but that we would support only such legislation as we believed to be right.

"I told him that I would take the matter up with my board at the Chautauqua meeting, but that, even if the board voted to support his bill, we could accept no gifts from him.

"The board turned his bill down. After they had done so, I read them his letter. I have it upstairs, in black and white."

The "certain bill" has not yet been presented to congress, Mrs. Winter says.

Pueblos Have Many Friends

Senate Bill 3855 To Settle Land Claims Stirs up Nation-Wide Controversy . . .

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

THE Pueblo Indians of New Mexico have many friends. That is the outstanding feature of a most astonishing situation that has grown out of the passage by the senate of the Bursum land bill. For it certainly is surprising to see millions of the American people rising in aggressive nationwide protest against a bill drafted and sponsored by the secretary of the interior, the office of Indian affairs and a United States senator.

The purpose of this article is not to pass judgment on the merits of the controversy. My sympathy is with the Pueblos. But for obvious reasons I shall not indorse the protestants who charge in effect that the Bursum bill is a "land grab," nor shall I indorse the bill as a measure drawn for the benefit of the Indians, as claimed by its supporters. Nor shall I attempt to straighten out the complications of the situation; they are the outgrowth of a century. I shall merely attempt to give some information about the controversy and some of its features.

Said Chairman H. P. Snyder of the house committee on Indian affairs: "A tremendous propaganda has been carried on throughout the country. There has been nothing like it in Indian affairs, so far as I know. I received, in three days, 250 telegrams stating that the senders were absolutely opposed to the so-called Bursum-Snyder bill and in favor of the Leatherwood-Jones bill."

Clippings from the news columns of newspapers, special articles, letters to the editor, editorials; articles in the periodicals and magazines, pamphlets and letters to members of congress would make scrapbooks by the carload. Addresses by the score have been made before all sorts of organizations; resolutions have been passed by all sorts of associations. All sorts of people are active—artists, writers, club women, mountaineers, archeologists, naturalists, sociologists; the list is a cross-section of American life.

And yet, to the student of the times, the uprising should not be surprising. There is a similar popular uprising every time the commercial interests try to break into the national parks through congress. The truth of the matter is that there is now a vast organized army of nature-lovers in this country who have made up their minds that birds and wild game and flowers and forests and natural scenic beauty are to have a square deal.

The Pueblos appeal to this army of nature-lovers in many ways, aside from the question of a "square deal," which always interests the American people.

The Pueblos of New Mexico are the father of agriculture and the mother of irrigation. Their pyramid houses stand today as they stood long before there was an English-speaking resident in the New World. Nowhere else in the world is there ancient history so brought down to date. Says Herbert J. Spinden of the Peabody museum, Harvard university:

"'One of our most precious possessions—we should keep it tenderly and proudly.' In these words Theodore Roosevelt characterized the arts of life and beauty created out of the painted deserts of the Southwest by the Pueblo Indians and our duty toward them. It was at Walpi . . . Romance is the most valuable commodity in the world today. A pale reflection of it on moving picture screens makes a vast business. The tale of real emotions to be felt draws eager travelers to undertake long voyages. Such a fine culture as that of the Pueblo Indians, without doubt the most complete expression of a stimulating group psychology in arts and ceremonies to be found anywhere in America, should be conserved with tender care. It is an irreplaceable thing. The best crop of the Southwest is scenery, and the slogan 'Our National Playground' depends for much of its effect upon Indian connotation. The Pueblo villages are famous; musicians go to study the songs, painters to portray the life—and the petty produce of the small fields turned into the pockets of men who vote will not enrich the state or the nation."

The Bursum bill (S. 3855—"To ascertain and settle claims of persons not Indian within Pueblo Indian land, land grants and reservations in the state of New Mexico") was passed by the senate practically without debate and without a record vote. Later, upon motion of Senator Borah, a resolution was adopted withdrawing the bill from the consideration of the house. The bill was then re-referred to the public lands and surveys committee of the senate.

Secretary Fall wrote a letter of more than 8,000 words to Senator Borah, complaining of the "clamor" against the bill, explaining and upholding the bill and offering to any congressional committee all the information in the possession of the Interior department.

Senator Borah read the letter into the Congressional Record and also his reply, which is short and contains this matter:

"If you will read the Congressional Record at the time the bill passed, you will find that I asked certain questions in regard to the purpose and effect of the bill. Senator Bursum replied to these questions, and I felt satisfied, upon an examination of the bill, that there was an entire misunderstanding by the senate, including Mr. Bursum, as to its effect. I therefore recalled the bill, not because I had felt the effect of propaganda but because I felt quite sure that the bill had not been sufficiently considered and that it passed the senate under a misunderstanding as to its terms."

Out of the opposition to the Bursum bill was organized the New Mexico Association on Indian Affairs. This association, in conjunction with the Indian welfare committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has published and circulated a pamphlet containing the text of the Bursum bill and an analysis of its provisions. The conclusions are these:

"In general the bill is so full of inconsistencies, contradictions and language requiring construction as to render it impossible of amendment in such a way as to serve any useful purpose, either for the Indians or for the claimants adverse to the Indians. It should be utterly and wholly defeated because: (1) It stultifies the government and adds another failure to its record of dealing with dependent peoples; (2) it will ruin the Pueblo Indians by the loss of their lands and in a short time utterly destroy them; (3) it will not benefit the settlers, who will be trapped in endless litigation and unlimited expense thereto."

The conditions are declared by the pamphlet to be intolerable both to the Indians and to the bona fide claimants. It is recommended that a judicial commission be appointed by the President. The work of the commission would be facilitated and the welfare of both Indians and claimants would largely be assured by the development without delay of sundry self-sustaining projects of irrigation and drainage which have been formulated and recommended for years by the Fifth Irrigation district of the Indian bureau

Senator A. A. Jones of New Mexico, at the request of organizations opposing the Bursum bill, has introduced a substitute measure (S. 4223) providing for a special court body to settle the claims and for the reclamation of arid lands. Representative H. P. Snyder, chairman of the house committee on Indian affairs, has introduced an amended Bursum bill.

Here are some facts which give an idea of the complexities of the situation:

There is no such thing in law as the Pueblo Indian tribe. There are the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, but there is no tribal organization that comprises all the pueblos in New Mexico. The bureau of Indian affairs has never exercised jurisdiction over them. It has never made any attempt to control their property. Each of these pueblos is incorporated as such under the laws of the state of New Mexico; the Pueblo Indians as individuals, have no property, for these separate pueblos as corporations own the property.

The settlements occupied by the Pueblo Indians are known as the pueblos and are as follows: Zuni, Acoma, Laguna, Isleta, Sandia, Santa Ana, Cia, Cochiti, San Felipe, Santo Domingo, Jemez, San Ildefonso, Pojoaque, Nambe, Santa Clara, Taos and San Juan, in connection with which may be mentioned Moqui or Hopi villages of Arizona.

The lands held by the Indians include Spanish grants, confirmed to the Indians during the first Lincoln administration. These grants date to a settlement between the Spanish government and the Indians about 1689; generally there was a grant of about 17,000 acres to each pueblo.

When the governors of the Pueblos appeared in Washington to plead their cause they brought with them their symbols of authority—silver-headed canes presented to their predecessors by President Lincoln in person when the Pueblo grants were confirmed by congress.

The vast majority of the claims have their origin prior to the date of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 1848, during Spanish and Mexican sovereignty. There are upward of 3,000 of these claims in areas from town lots to farms and ranches. The total value of all claims as estimated by attorneys for claimant is from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000. The claims are found in nearly all of the pueblo grants. In a vast majority of the claims the owners declare their title was obtained by purchase or contract with the governing authorities of the pueblo.

"An example of the encroachments upon the original grants is the San Juan pueblo. As confirmed and patented this grant had 17,000 acres. Approximately 4,000 acres are irrigable and of these 4,000 acres 3,412 acres are in the hands of claimants. The San Juan pueblo contains 430 Indians. There are therefore less than two acres for the support of each Indian.

"We have reached the point where we must either live or die," says the appeal of the Pueblos to the people of the United States.

Of the pictures No. 1 is the pueblo of Taos and No. 2 an annual ceremonial dance there. No. 3 is a prehistoric home in Mesa Verde National park of the Cliff Dwellers, possible ancestors. No. 4 is a Pueblo delegate to Washington.

The RUHR BASIN

Electric Welding in Essen.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

The Ruhr basin, where France now seeks to collect unpaid German reparations, is a true daughter of the Rhine. And long ago Hugo said of the Rhine: "For thirty centuries it has seen the forms and reflected the shadows of almost every warrior who has tilled the Old World with that tool they call the sword." Caesar, Attila, Charlemagne, Napoleon, Barbarossa, Bismarck, Hindenberg, Foch, Haig, Pershing—and Degoutte—all have passed this way.

The Ruhr river is an inconspicuous stream, hardly more than a hundred miles long, with little volume of water, and navigable, even with the aid of its 12 locks, for a distance of only 43 miles. But its valley and the rolling country to the north for a few miles, to which it has given its name, is a region of concentrated industrialism. There, in a district roughly 40 by 10 miles, has been developed the greatest coal production in Europe. And with iron ore available from the nearby former "German Lorraine" and Luxemburg, there sprang up the industry of fabricating iron and steel, which went farther, perhaps, than any other activity toward building up the mighty German empire of 1913, and gave a literal significance to Bismarck's ideal for a country of "blood and iron."

One could pick out the oval of the Ruhr region on a map of Germany by its railroads. Germany's steel highways form a relatively close network over the entire country, but in the Ruhr region the lines draw together into a fine screen, showing unmistakably the hive of industry that this district has come to be.

Essen, the City of Steel.

The solar plexus of the Ruhr district is Essen, known far and wide as the home of the great Krupps' gun and armorplate factories. In prominent places in the city stand statues to Bismarck and Alfred Krupp—the man who laid the foundations for Germany's powerful fighting machine, and the man who equipped it and became tremendously wealthy in the process. Krupp really made Essen almost as truly as the United States Steel corporation made Gary, Ind. The town was founded in the Ninth century, but as late as 1854 it was little more than a village with 10,500 inhabitants. Before the World war it had grown to be a city of 300,000, and of these nearly 50,000 were employed in the Krupp works. From 1914 to 1918, when Germany was putting forth every effort to produce more and more war supplies, the population of Essen had a war addition of 100,000 or more.

With the development of Essen as a steel and iron center hundreds of other establishments joined the Krupps, until the environs of the city are now a forest of chimneys. Near Essen, too, are many coal pits.

Its famous crucible steel is the oldest specialty of Essen. To obtain it, raw materials especially chosen are melted in separate crucibles and then poured together to form the ingot. This particular steel is said to excel all others in purity; the giant ingots are absolutely homogeneous, close-grained and uniform throughout.

Lately, too, a new stainless and rustless steel has been made at Essen. It is claimed that not even boiling nitric acid can affect it, and it is well adapted as a substitute for nickel-plate in the manufacture of surgical and other instruments.

Aside from its truly amazing industrial aspects, with its singularly adequate welfare institutions for aged and crippled workmen, Essen is only an overgrown German factory town—somber and smoky. It is the sort of place you like to see once. At nearby Werden, fitting background to the drab dullness of Essen, stands an old Benedictine abbey, used now as a penitentiary.

The Ruhr river itself rises on the north side of Winterberg in Sauerland, flows northward past the romantically situated town of Arnsberg, and thence winds on down into the mining district around Hagen. Here, after receiving the waters of the Lenne, it twists on past Witten, Steele, Kettwig and Mulheim, getting greasier and blacker as it washes past coal dumps and foundries, till it joins the Rhine at Ruhrort. From this point, also, the Ruhr canal connects it with Duisburg.

Rhine Crowded With Traffic.

From Witten to its mouth, some 43 miles, the Ruhr is navigable, with the aid of a dozen locks, as has been said, but low water often delays the boats. Here and there, along its busy course, it even finds time to pause and turn the wheels of little mills and factories. Down the Rhine the trade of the Ruhr moves out to sea.

Here water traffic fairly crowds the stream. Boats are everywhere, as thick as Chinese junks and sampans at Canton or Newchwang. But there is no jamming, ramming, shouting, and battling with oars or poles, as among the belligerent boatmen of the East. Here are semaphores, signal flags, order. Hundreds of boats are handled a day, with the same precision and speed that we handle trains at a great American union station. So great is the concentration of boats that it has given Duisburg-Ruhrort, at the mouth of the Ruhr, world-wide fame as the greatest river harbor in the world.

This Rhine, this artery of Europe, this Rhenus Superbus, as the Romans named it when they built Cologne—how few Americans realize what it means to western Europe! From the Alps to the sea, from Lake Constance down to Rotterdam, "the village of herrings," this swift stream, green and shallow, tumbles along; into its foaming waters are crowded over 20,000 steamers, tugs and barges—a tonnage of nearly five millions.

From Cologne to London, by way of the Rhine and serving the Ruhr frontier, runs a regular line of specially built river-sea steamers, which do away with the cost of unloading and reloading from river barge to ocean steamer, or vice versa, at Rotterdam.

Ideas, as well as boats, it is said, are carried on great rivers. Here, then, may be a lesson for America on how to use inland streams. Through all this region railways parallel the rivers, cross and recross them, and compete with them; yet the water-borne cargoes continue to be enormous, taxing the capacity of twice ten thousand bottoms.

No country has developed its water transport to a higher efficiency. The whole of Germany is covered with a regular network of canals and channeled streams, linked up with one another wherever practicable.

Many Big Cities There.

Essen is mentioned almost whenever the Ruhr is mentioned, so that it is understandable that the two are sometimes considered synonymous. But big cities are thick in the Ruhr. Entering the region at Duisburg, its gate-city, with 230,000 inhabitants, by a journey of less than five miles one reaches Oberhausen, with a population of 90,000. Three miles farther is Mulheim, with 112,000; five miles away, Essen, with 300,000, and four miles farther, Gelsenkirchen, with 170,000. By an advance of another four miles into the Ruhr one reaches Bochum, with a population of 137,000, while barely ten miles farther to the east, and still short of the eastern limits of the region, lies Dortmund, with 214,000 inhabitants.

Dortmund is the largest city in Westphalia. It boasts a history dating back a thousand years. Long ago it was a free, fortified Hanseatic town, and once it withstood a siege of 21 months, "led by the good bishop of Cologne and 48 other princes." It is proud of its churches, centuries old; its monasteries, with their relics and antiquities, and its municipal museum, with prehistoric, Roman and Germanic collections.

Hard by is the historic hill of Hohen-Syburg, where Charlemagne fought with the Saxons. From its crest you can view the vast, smoking, seething valley of the Ruhr, where drones and idlers are an unknown human species.

In the Ruhr, more nearly than in most industrial regions, everyone is a worker. Technicians, clerks and other "white-collar" men there must be, but pre-eminently it is a land of grimy, sweating toilers—between three and one half and four millions of them.

Pipes at the beach are only smoked when one is in her bathing suit.

HARDING PRAISES WORLD COURT

U. S. Executive Claims That America Cannot Refuse to Join Movement.

HAS STUDIED PROBLEM

President Harding Looks on Court of International Justice as Greatest Advance Toward Substitution of Law for Force.

Washington, D. C.—President Harding looks on the court of international justice as "one of the greatest advances which world society has made toward conditions in which at last the rule of law may be substituted for the rule of force," he wrote Lieutenant Governor Earl D. Bloom of Ohio, in response to a resolution of the Ohio state senate commending him "for his courageous stand" in urging American participation.

Has Given Much Thought.

"The recommendation that the United States adhere to the protocol under which this court has been created, was not put forward without the most thorough and matured deliberation," the president wrote. "Those who at this time are entrusted with the direction of the international relations of our country are firmly convinced that this move not only would represent the wise policy for our own people but would be an emphatic testimony of our purpose to encourage every feasible project for establishing the rule of law, as opposed to the rule of power in this world. The whole story of civilization has been the story of the effort to substitute the domination of justice under law, for armed might.

Based on American Ideal.

"I may say frankly that it is inconceivable to me that the American people who have so long been devoted to this ideal should refuse their adherence now to such a program as is represented by this tribunal. Nothing could be farther from the purpose of the administration than to suggest that our country surrender any of its control over its own fundamental rights and destinies. But we may be sure that differences will always arise among states and peoples, precisely as they have always arisen between individuals; and just as courts of justice and equity have been set up to determine issues as between individuals, so it is proper and logical that provision should be made for a like adjudication of these differences between nations and peoples, which may properly be committed to such determination."

"SPIDER" DROPS 10 STORIES

Harry F. Young Loses Life While Scaling Hotel Martinque.

New York—With a Broadway crowd standing agape and movie machines clicking out their yards of celluloid ribbon, Harry F. Young, self-styled "spider" plunged ten stories to his death while attempting to scale the side of the Hotel Martinque.

Women fainted and disorder ensued. Police reserves had to be called before the body could be removed and traffic restarted.

Among those who crowded Greeley Square, watching the performer at his stunt, was his wife, with whom he had just lunched. She swooned. Revived in a drug store nearby, she was removed to a hospital.

The square was packed when Young appeared. Clinging to points of vantage on the 33rd street elevated station were dozens of cameramen. Windows of every skyscraper in the vicinity were filled with men and women, laughing and talking excitedly as Young began his climb. The police estimated the crowd at 20,000.

Young wore a white shirt, duck trousers and white shoes, which served to outline his figure against the drab wall. On his back hung a sign reading "Safety Last"—for Young was an incorporator of the "Safety Last Society," formed last week by human flies, parachute jumpers and folk of adventure liking whose occupation caused them to be listed by insurance companies as "bad risks."

The fourth floor was gained without incident. At that point Young climbed over a balcony and walked over to the center of the building as if to afford the crowd a better view.

Young apparently felt he was to meet death for people in windows past which he climbed said later that they heard him muttering to himself: "I can't make it; I can't make it." But he kept on.

When he reached the tenth floor his foot slipped. Down he plunged. From the crowd rose a groan that grew like the moaning of the wind.

Falling close to the wall, he crashed on to the balcony.

Spanish Queen to Get Rose.

Rome—Pope Pius in May will revive one of the oldest customs of the holy see, which fell into disuse more than 20 years ago, when he sends the golden rose to the queen of Spain. The golden rose, made up of a cluster of roses and buds on one stem, all of solid gold, in time gone by, was given each year by the pope to the queen, who during the year had performed the most pious deeds for the church. The queen of Spain has earned the honor for her work in the past year.

Plant Growth and Sunlight.

Recent experiments show that the amount of light that a plant has affects its growth fully as much as climate. The iris, for example, which ordinarily blooms in May or June, would not bloom under hothouse conditions in winter until its period of daily light was artificially lengthened by six hours. The October chrysanthemum was made to bloom in midsummer by shortening the daily light period; lettuce by the same means was held in the rosette stage for a long time; and the radish, with only seven hours of daylight, grew for more than a year before it finally shot up its flower stem and died. —Youth's Companion.

PACKING PLANT MAY RE-OPEN

Stockholders Invited to Meeting at Fargo March 22, to Discuss Sale Plans.

PLAN NEW COMPANY

New York Financier Has Made Proposal to Reopen Place—Old Stockholders Will Hold Stock in New Company.

Fargo, N. D.—Officers of the Equity Co-operative Packing company of Fargo have called a special meeting of the stockholders to be held in the Fargo auditorium March 22, to consider the sale of the plant, it has been announced. If the plant is sold, under the plan proposed, it is to be reopened and put into operation immediately.

The plant has been closed since April, 1921. It carries an indebtedness of about $155,000. A mortgage amounting to over $55,000 has been foreclosed against the plant and the year of redemption will expire June 6, 1923.

Emerson Would Buy It.

Herbert A. Emerson of the H. A. Emerson, Inc., company of New York city, has offered to purchase the plant.

He will organize a new corporation, incorporated under the laws of Delaware. This corporation will issue $5,000,000 of common and preferred stock. The Equity Co-operative Packing company will receive $750,000 in shares of stock in the new corporation as the full purchase price for the plant, with the agreement that the new corporation is to pay off all of the debts against the company, amounting to $155,000, and open and operate the plant.

Plant to Be Reopened.

"Mr. Emerson agrees to reopen the plant as soon as possible in the spring, if the deal is consummated, and to keep it in operation," said George E. Brastrup, secretary of the packing company.

Mr. Emerson was in Fargo recently and made a thorough inspection of the plant. He had been in correspondence with the officials of the company for four months, with the idea that he would be able to raise the money to operate the plant as the Equity Co-operative Packing company.

After an investigation of the plant a week or two ago, he decided that he would rather buy the plant and made the offer already outlined.

WILL BOOST N. D. LIGNITE

Operators to Work in Co-operation With State Department.

Minot—"The fact that the state legislature amended the immigration appropriation measure so as to direct the commissioner of immigration to work in conjunction with the North Dakota Lignite Coal Operators' association in extending the market for lignite coal is particularly gratifying to officers of the association," James S. Milloy, secretary of the Minot Association of Commerce, who has charge of the operators' publicity campaign, has stated. "It can properly be taken by the officers of the operators' organization as recognition that their organization is primarily a development one, and it will enable the association to appeal to the other development organizations throughout the state for co-operation."

To Promote Industry.

According to Mr. Milloy, the operators' organization is not concerned with price fixing or other problems of that nature, but will devote its energy entirely to an advertising and publicity campaign to extend the market for lignite coal into eastern North Dakota and parts of Minnesota and South Dakota.

"So much publicity has been given to experiments in making lignite briquets that many people have the idea that lignite as it leaves the mine is not a satisfactory fuel," he stated. "Nothing could be more remote from the truth. Lignite coal is now being used extensively in North Dakota, and the fact that more than 1,000,000 tons or better than 70 per cent of the state's requirements is lignite should correct such impressions. It is used for all purposes, stoves, furnaces, and industrial plants, and is proving an economical and satisfactory coal.

Educate Consumers.

The operators hope to interest thousands of people in eastern North Dakota and parts of Minnesota and South Dakota in the saving to be effected by the use of lignite. When they learn that lignite can be used in any stove or furnace and is saving thousands of families between 25 and 40 per cent of their usual fuel bill, lignite mines in North Dakota will be producing several million tons annually.

Builders Get Wage Increase.

Pittsburgh—A new wage contract carrying an increase of from four to ten per cent for the principal building crafts in the Pittsburgh district has been signed and will remain in effect until March 1, 1924, E. M. Tate, secretary of the building trades employer's association, has announced. The chief crafts involved in the new agreement and the day scale of wages follows: Carpenters, $9.60; sheet metal workers, $9.40 ($9.60 after July 1); plasterers, $11; electricians, $9.60 ($10 after July 1).

ENGINEER SAYS IT IS WORLD-BEATER

"My Digestion Is Sound as a Dollar Since Taking Tanlac," Declares Buffalo Citizen.

"There is no doubt about it, Tanlac does all they claim it will do—and more," was the positive statement made recently by Richard H. Lawson, well-known engineer, of 1007 Elmwood Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

"I used Tanlac for a combination of troubles and it put me in splendid condition all the way round. First, I had a bad case of stomach trouble, was simply chock full of sourness and gas, had a general distressed feeling and a burning pain in my stomach that I couldn't get rid of. With my appetite wrecked and digestion gone, I became awfully weak, nervous and run down and could get scarcely any rest or sleep at all.

"Tanlac answered every demand made upon it in my case and today my digestion is sound as a dollar, I have an immense appetite, and with every ache and pain gone, I am sleeping fine and feeling strong and energetic as of old. Tanlac is 100 % good."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

IN LIGHT OF EXPERIENCE

Some Few Things That a Wife Admits She Has Learned From Her Husband.

He really can't advise me as to taking the leadership of a relay of girls who belong to the Girls' Someday club.

They carry a little kit and a basket of canned things, and go off on long hikes and picnics in lovely woodsy places.

The lady who has charge of all the relays says it is awfully hard to get grownup leaders and she thinks that with my personality the girls would just love me; and you don't have to know much to be a leader.

The girls will tell you how.

She said that a rich girl belonged to the club, and her mother had to coax her to eat the very daintiest things at home; and after she had taken a ten-mile hike she ate sausages, just as the other girls did.

And her leader felt that it was awfully worth-while work for anyone.

The girls give lovely concerts to raise money to pay for having the concert tickets printed.

And they are banded together to do good, and they ask everybody to please help them in their work.

My husband says that years ago when he was a boy women used to marry men before they began to ask them for money.—Life.

No Restriction.

It was a wintry day and Geneva, age three, and her aunt had driven to the store. The little girl was picked up by a clerk and placed on a chair by the stove, and her aunt began loosening the many wrappings of the child.

RATHER APPEALED TO HER

Girl's Frank Statement Must Have Been Somewhat Disconcerting to Her Accepted Husband.

Dr. Brander Matthews, the famous critic, said at a Columbia tea:

"The school of French novelists that is passing—the school of Anatole France, and Loti and Mirabeau and Maupassant—was very brilliant, certainly, but its philosophy wasn't cheering.

"Those men remind me o' an anecdote. A young chap had proposed to a beautiful girl. The girl, blushing and weeping a little, had accepted him. He folded her in his arms, pressed his lips to hers and whispered:

"Dearest, is this the first time you have ever loved?"

"Yes," the girl sighed, "but it's so nice that I hope it won't be the last."

Immigration Figures.

No trustworthy immigration records were kept in the early history of the republic. From 1783 it is estimated that the number of immigrants to this country was about 4,000 a year until 1794, when the number was increased to 10,000. Then it dropped to about 6,000 until 1806, when it was reduced to practically nothing for the succeeding ten years. In 1816 it was about 8,000 and the next year 22,240. From October 1, 1819, a record has been kept, but up until 1856 it included all "alien passengers arrived" and did not distinguish between immigrants and passengers, nor did it include immigration overland from Canada and Mexico. This record, which is inaccurate as explained, shows a total of 33,630,104 from the year ending September 30, 1820, to the year ending June 30, 1920. The largest immigration in any one year was 1,285,349 for the fiscal year 1907.

VOL. XII. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY MARCH 16, 1923 NO.

T. B. Folden was a Thief River Falls business visitor Wednesday.

Rev. Ordahl went to Badger to attend a church meeting Monday

S. G. Svenkeson was here from Bartin a few days this week on business.

John Bratrud was a Holt business visitor visitor between trains Saturday.

Mrs. Brunsberg of Gary came Saturday to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. K. T. Knutson and family.

R. Reierson returned home Tuesday evening from a few days visit with friends at Randen.

Archie Bloflat of Montevideo, Minn. came Saturday to visit at the homes of Mrs. Fred Larson and Nels Lysne.

Mrs. Ludwig Monson and little daughter, Lida returned home Wednesday from visiting relatives at Thief River Falls.

Mat Larson was taken sick Saturday with his old trouble, a complication of diseases, from which he has suffered for several years.

C. L. Sandberg went to Red Lake Falls Tuesday on business and on Wednesday attended a lumbermans convention in Thief River Falls.

Dr. Mellby was called Sunday to see Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Lund who were both sick with the flu, but they are both much better at present.

Peter Bjerken brot his wife home from Thief River Falls Saturday where she had been receiving medical treatment but is not improving very much, we are sorry to report.

The Holt creamery churned ninety three tubs of butter the first two weeks in March, which is by far their largest make at this time of the year, and their make is increasing right along.

Mrs. Clarence Erickson had not been so well for the past few days and on Wednesday went to the Thief River Falls hospital for treatment. Mrs. Hjalmer Johnson went along to take care of Mrs. Erickson on the journey.

Sam Mickelson and family entertained the following neighbors and friends at the hotel Monday night: C. L. Heinze and family, Mrs. Nyberg and family, A. Bjerk and family, the editor and wife, and Mrs. Ordahl and children.

Nils Nass and Gilbert Johnson have been hauling gravel all winter and have graveled over a mile, besides fixing bad places in the road. They are expecting orders almost any time now to clean out the culverts and commence maintainence work.

Mr. Netteland has collected and forwarded to headquarters, the sum of $10.00, from the pupils and their parents, for the Michael J. Dowling Home for crippled children.

We hope to be able to send in some contributions in the next week or two, to this most worthy cause

A farewell reception was held in the Lutheran church basement Sunday evening for C. L. Heinze and family. The church was crowded with friends of the family who regret their departure. but however are glad they are not moving farther away than Thief River Falls. A good program was given, lunch was served and everybody had a good time. Mr. and Mrs. Heinze were presented with a nice little purse, for which they wish to thank all the people, also for the kindness shown them.

They leave this week for their new home where the best wishes of their friends will follow them.

Seeing Things

The Thief River Falls Times man must have been seeing things lately, at least he had a vision last week wherein he saw the farmers of eastern Marshall county clamoring to be united with his county.

No doubt his arguments are good, but he fails to take in both sides of the question.

He seems to think that now Warren has a fine court house they they would be willing to let us help Thief River Falls build one too.

He sees a vision of Holt and Middle River favoring the scheme, and no doubt realises that after Holt has had one county seat fight, a bank failure and paid the mayor of Thief River Falls a salary of $200.00 per month for several months, out of the funds of the bank and by order of the state banking department, that we are not financially able to fight their scheme.

But Middle River did'nt get a chance to try their hand, as they were knocked out of the county seat fight by a court decision.

He must have forgotten that Newfolden claimed the right to the county seat because they had a potato warehouse.

The Times man also seems to have forgotten Brother Mussey's dream wherein he saw large chunks taken out of both Marshall and Beltrami counties, a new county created with Grygla as the county seat and railroads running into that hustling burg from all directions.

Perhaps some office seekers would favor the scheme of The Times, knowing that an eastern Marshall county man stands about as much show of landing an office in Warren, as he would of making a trip to the moon, but-- they would'nt stand any better chance with T. R. F.

You Pay for a De Laval Whether You Buy One or Not

If you are using a worn-out, inferior cream separator, or skimming cream by hand, you are surely wasting enough cream to pay for a De Laval in a short time.

The selection of a cream separator is more important than that of any other machine on the farm, for none other can either save or waste so much, twice a day, 365 days a year.

A De Laval Separator will:

—Skim cleaner for many more years than any other;
—Skim milk clean at lower temperature than any other separator;
—Deliver a higher testing cream, which is more acceptable to the creamery, and easier and less costly to ship;
—And deliver a cream which will make better butter.

Do not be deceived by separators which are claimed to be "just as good and cost less." When you consider its greater savings, greater reliability, longer life, the extra time it saves, and the greater satisfaction it gives, the De Laval is, in the end, by far the most economical.

"BUY SOME WHISKY?"

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga, and to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. With his friend, Pelt, a newspaper man, Bartley goes to Circle Lake, the pair becoming the guests of Bob Currie, an old friend. The three visit the Slyke home. Slyke resents Bartley's coming, saying he is satisfied the two men in prison are guilty. Bartley is not. Next morning Slyke is found dead in bed, apparently having shot himself. Miss Potter, the dead man's sister-in-law, the village police chief, Roche, and the family physician, Doctor King, all agree Slyke killed himself, but Bartley insists he was murdered. Investigating, Bartley finds evidence that Slyke, after a card party he had given, was shot on the tower of the house, undressed, and placed in bed. During his absence from the room someone removes the revolver from Slyke's hand. A boy working in the garage asserts he heard a shot during the night, apparently "in the air," of course really on the tower. Ruth, Slyke's stepdaughter, still further complicates the case.

Her story, of course, would have to be checked up, but her actions were frank and her manner seemed truthful. She could evidently throw no light on our problem. She waited quietly for Bartley's next question, which, when it came, was a surprise even to me.

"Did you see the dog when you came in?"

"Oh, yes! He came to the door and walked to the foot of the stairs with me."

Bartley turned to the butler and asked, "Was the dog in this room when you came down this morning?"

"Yes, sir. He always sleeps here."

There was a long silence after this, broken at last by the girl asking if she might return to her room. Bartley smiled and assented. I could see that he was not satisfied at the way things had gone. His lips were shut tight and his eyes wandered restlessly around the room. He glanced moodily down at the woman in the chair, who had recovered her composure to some extent, and was now watching with keen eyes everything that was going on.

After a while, Bartley turned to the butler. "Did you see anyone near the door of Mr. Slyke's room while we were in there?"

"Why, I don't know, sir. I did see the chauffeur coming down the stairs. But I don't know if he had been up to the room."

"If you can find him, send him to me at once," Bartley commanded.

The butler took this order as a dismissal and left the room. Bartley turned to Miss Potter and asked her if she had returned to Slyke's room after she left us there. She shook her head. There was again a long silence. At length Bartley broke it by telling her that she need not remain any longer. She rose to her feet and started toward the stairway. Half way across the floor she paused, and said in a voice that hesitated more than once, "You asked me, Mr. Bartley, if, when I found Mr. Slyke was dead, I touched the bedclothes."

Bartley turned quickly. The tone of his voice as he answered her question showed that he knew something important was coming.

"Yes, I did."

With her hands playing nervously with a fold of her dress and her eyes on the floor, she continued slowly, "I did not touch the bedclothes, but—I—I—"

"Yes," encouraged Bartley. "You did what?"

She seemed to find it difficult to answer. "When—I went in that room—and found him dead"—her voice was very low—"he looked—I mean, his eyes so frightened me that I—" she paused again—"I closed them."

For a while we looked at her, too surprised to speak. Bartley's brows knit and a curious look came into his face.

All at once I realized the full meaning of her words. If she had closed Slyke's eyes, then it would be hard for Bartley to prove that he had been murdered. He had claimed that, if Slyke had committed suicide, his eyes would have been open. He had gone even further and said it was the murderer who had closed his eyes, thinking that was the way they should look in death. But now Miss Potter had told us that it was she who had closed them. Slyke might, after all, have killed himself! Would Bartley still be able to prove that he had been murdered?

Once more Miss Potter lapsed into her old sullen mood and refused to add anything further. Bartley plied her with questions, but in the end she had added nothing to her first statement that Slyke's staring eyes had frightened her and she had closed them. She insisted, however, that she had not touched the bedclothes, that they had been close around his neck and up over his chin when she found him.

When we were alone, Roche turned to Bartley and said, "There goes your theory of murder. You can't prove now that he did not kill himself."

Bartley listened to Roche with the air of a man whose thoughts were far away. When he paused, he did not reply at once.

"Roche," he said at length, "I am sure it was murder, not suicide. It's one of the most mysterious crimes I have ever heard of. We are up in the air. We know of no reason either for Slyke's having been murdered or for his having killed himself. There is a great deal yet to do. You had better get a couple of your men up here as quickly as possible and search the house."

Roche went out to telephone for his men and Bartley walked over to the window. I followed him and we stood looking out at the view.

He placed his hand on my shoulder. "Pelt, you have a good deal of work to do today. I want you to find out all you can about the men who were at the poker game. Then you must see that man Lawrence and get his story. Find out why he stayed behind the others. If you have any time left, you had better look up in the files of the local newspapers the burglary of last year."

"You don't think that had anything to do with the murder, do you?" I asked in wonder.

He gave me one of those smiles of his that tell nothing, and drawled out, "I am not saying, but you know we came up here on a burglary case, not a murder mystery."

He did not give me time to wonder what his reply meant, but continued, "Better go to Currie's and get the car. Here are the names of the men you are to see."

As I was leaving the room he waved his hand and called after me with a smile, "Good luck! See you tonight."

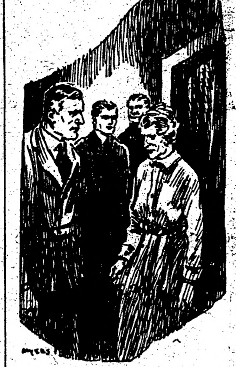
CHAPTER V

In Which I Hear More About the Burglary.

Currie was sitting on the piazza when I reached the house. He got up hurriedly and advanced to me.

"Where in the devil is John?" he asked.

He apparently knew that we had called over to Slyke's, but he did not know the reason. I answered, "He is over at Slyke's; Slyke was murdered last night."



"I Did Not Touch the Bedclothes, but I—I—"

His large red face grew purple. "Murdered?" he gasped. "My G—, who did it?"

I told him all I knew. He listened with intense interest and growing horror. When I ended by saying that Bartley would be back to dinner, he shrugged his shoulders.

"There goes my visit with John. I have been after him for a long time to come up here; and when he does, he finds a murder right on my doorstep." He paused, then added, "I wonder who killed Slyke. I never liked him very much, but I know of no reason for his being murdered."

I went to the garage and backed out his little runabout, and started for town. In front of the post office I stopped the car and got out. I knew that if the postmaster would give me the addresses of the men who had been at the card party, it would save me a lot of time. Upon explaining my errand, he gave me the desired information. One of the first names on the list was that of the editor of the local newspaper, and it suggested an idea to me.

Arriving at the newspaper office, I found the man I sought just going out to luncheon. When he learned that I had come to ask him some questions about Slyke, he invited me to lunch with him.

We went to his club, and in the small dining room found a table to ourselves. When I mentioned the list of names, he told me all that he knew. A few men, mostly old friends, met every week or so to play poker. They went to Slyke's usually because, as he put it, "Slyke had more booze than the rest of us." The games were friendly affairs and the stakes low. When I asked him if Mr. Lawrence stayed after the others had gone home, he replied that he had and that he thought Slyke himself had asked him to remain, though he did not know for what reason. Suddenly it occurred to him that what he had said might place Lawrence in an awkward position.

"Jim Lawrence," he said, "could have had nothing to do with Slyke's death. Lawrence is so darned nervous himself that he would never have dared to fire a gun. It's too bad he stayed behind last night."

As I wanted to interview Lawrence next, the editor accompanied me in his car to point out the building where Lawrence had his office. Here he left me, saying that if I would call at his office in about an hour, he would have the back files of the newspaper I wanted ready for me."

Lawrence's office was on the second floor of a brick building, and his door bore the sign "Law Office." At a desk, reading a newspaper, was a man of about forty-five, with a very thin, nervous face. He threw down the paper and eyed me questioningly. When I told him that Slyke was dead and that I had come to learn about his interview with him, he moved uneasily in his chair; but when I added that we believed that Slyke had been murdered, and that as far as we knew he was the last person to see him alive, he was absolutely unnerved. I could see that, until I mentioned the word murder, he had thought that Slyke had committed suicide. For a second I wondered if, after all, he had not had something to do with the crime.

Taking a chair by his side, I said, "You were the last person, so far as we can discover, to see Mr. Slyke alive. We know that you stayed for a few moments only, and that he himself asked that you remain. As you were the last one to see him alive, we are much interested in what you can tell us of how he acted. Did he seem nervous or upset?"

My question did not make the man by my side any easier. He answered quickly, in a high-pitched voice that broke several times, "I did stay; but the other men will tell you that I was going home with them until Slyke asked me to wait a moment. I had no idea beforehand what he wanted. I wish to God I had gone with the rest. Some d—d fool will say I killed him."

It was just what some people would say, when it became public that the butler had not heard Slyke's voice again after Lawrence's departure. But for myself, I could not connect guilt with the thin, nervous figure beside me.

"What did he want to see you about?" I asked.

Lawrence flushed, then half grinned, as he answered, "He asked me if I wanted to buy some Scotch whisky."

"Buy some whisky?" I repeated in astonishment.

"Yes, it seems foolish, doesn't it? But that's what he wanted to see me about. He said he had lots more than he needed, and that he could let me have five cases."

I said nothing, trying to digest this astonishing information. I had been wondering what it was that Slyke wanted to see Lawrence about, and had even made several guesses; but never in my wildest imagination had I supposed that it was about whisky. I could understand why Lawrence should want to buy it, for good whisky is hard to get; but why Slyke, presumed to be a rich man, should want to sell five cases was beyond my comprehension.

He saw my surprise and said, "It does seem strange. I was surprised myself. I had heard that he had a lot of booze; but we were not the closest of friends, and nowadays a man lets his liquor go only to his pals. The man who will let you have five cases of whisky is a pretty good friend."

I smiled at his answer. He was right. People with imported liquor were not giving it away. And what was more, few men of Slyke's position were selling their private stock.

"He told me," Lawrence continued, "that he had a great deal more than he could use, and that he would sell me some for one hundred dollars a case. That's pretty cheap for imported stuff."

"And then you left him?" I asked.

"Yes. He told me he was not going to bed yet. Said someone was coming in about half-past-one."

Here was a new piece of evidence. Slyke, then, had not gone to bed after Lawrence left, but had waited up for some other visitor. It was curious, to say the least. One o'clock in the morning is not a usual hour for receiving callers.

"Have you any idea who it was?"

"No," he said, shaking his head, "I haven't the least idea. As I was starting to go he said, 'Stay awhile. I am expecting a man about two, and have to wait up for him.' That's all I know about it."

It was not much of a clue, still it was better than nothing. It did establish the fact that there had been someone else with Slyke that night. That is, if he were telling the truth. The burning question in my mind was, who was that second person? Was he the one who had killed Slyke? The odds seemed to favor it. Lawrence had little further information to give me. He said that Slyke had not been especially nervous, nor had he acted like a man afraid of anything.

I rose to go, but paused at a new thought.

"Oh, Mr. Lawrence, did Slyke give you a drink?"

He had accompanied me to the door, and paused, one hand on the knob. "Yes, he did, up in the room over his sleeping room. He got out a bottle and two glasses and we had a drink."

"That's enough to prove those men had nothing to do with the burglary."

Grip Left You a Bad Back?

DOES your back ache day after day with a dull, unceasing throb? Are you worn out, and discouraged — ready to "give up?" Then why not look to your kidneys. Chances are a cold or a chill has weakened your kidneys? Poisons have accumulated that well kidneys would filter off. It's little wonder, then, you have constant backache, headaches, dizzy spells, annoying bladder irregularities, and sharp rheumatic twinges — that you feel nervous, "blue" and irritable. Don't wait for serious kidney trouble. Get back your health while you can. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Grateful Folks:

Elishu Stockwell, R. F. D. No. 3, Beach, N. D., says: "I was suddenly taken with kidney trouble and my back became very painful. My kidneys acted irregularly and the secretions contained a brick-dust-like sediment. Whenever I took cold I was sure to be worse. Hearing about Doan's Kidney Pills being such a good kidney medicine, I decided to try them. I used a box and my kidneys became regular and the backache has never troubled me since."

Mrs. E. Graham, 411 Third Ave., N., Jamestown, says: "I took cold and it settled on my kidneys. I suffered so with backache, it interfered with my housework. Twinges of rheumatic pain affected my left shoulder and made it painful. I was so bad I couldn't lift. My kidneys acted too frequently, and as a member of the family had used Doan's Kidney Pills, I used some. Doan's cured me and I haven't had a sign of the trouble since."

HEALTH FOR WORKING WOMEN

Let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Help You to Become Well.

Thousands of girls have to work in homes, offices, stores, mills or factories who are physically unfit for work, with often an aged or invalid father or mother dependent upon them for support. Standing all day week in and week out, or sitting in cramped positions a girl often contracts some deranged condition of her organic system which calls a halt to her progress and demands restoration to health before she can be of use to herself or anyone else.

For these distressing weaknesses and derangements these girls have found health to do their work in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"Like many girls, I had troubles every month," says Carolyne Mangels, "and they interfered with my work as I could never be sure of my time. My mother often suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but I never did until lately. I have had very good results, and am now a private secretary and do my work without missing a day. I recommend your medicine to every girl who speaks of having troubles like I have had."—CAROLYNE MANGELS, 407 14th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Milwaukee, Wis.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine for three and a half years, and they have improved my health wonderfully. My mother also has taken the Vegetable Compound and we recommend it to our friends. I am working in an office now and can always do my work as I do not have the troubles I had at first. I read of your Vegetable Compound in the newspaper and you may use my letter in that way if you wish to do so."—ELEANOR SHEBLAK, 537 36th St., Milwaukee, Wis.

HOW TURTLES FIND THE SEA

Explanation, According to Harvard Scientist, Is Their Tendency to Travel Down Hill.

Why loggerhead turtles readily find their way to the sea soon after hatching, has been discovered by George H. Parker of the zoological department of Harvard university. These reptiles are hatched inland, and soon after birth crawl out of their nests, he explains. Then with a few exceptions they immediately start their journey in the exact direction of the sea.

The most important reason for this behavior of the turtle is their tendency to go down hill, Mr. Parker believes. They also show an inclination to move toward regions in which the horizon is clear and unobstructed by large masses. And blue areas seem to attract them more than other colors. Their actions should be regarded more complex than a simple response to light, for the retina of their eyes respond to the details, such as blue color, rather than to the image as a whole.

And Nothing Else to Do.

Man—Where are you going to attend school this fall? At the university?

Maid—No, I'm tired of dancing.

Got Some Telling Points.

A traveling man got a letter from his firm using a good deal of crisp language about expense accounts. It was passed around in the smoker and condemned roundly. After some bitter comment he slipped it into his inside pocket.

"But why do you keep that stuff?" asked a friend. "I'd tear it into a thousand bits and scatter it along the right of way."

"Well, they made some good points," he explained. "And I've gotta write to my wife tonight."

"Huh?"

"She's spending too much coin."

A Bad Bargain.

A darky who had recently married was asked by the farmer for whom he worked how he and his Mandy were getting along.

"Not very well, boss. The fact is, Mandy and me we've done pa'hted."

"Parted!" exclaimed the farmer. "Why, you were just married. You know, Sam, you can't leave Mandy. She's your wife, and you took her for better or worse."

"That's just it, boss," said Sam. "I shore did tell that pahson that I took that gal for better or wus. But, Lawd, dat gal is wus'n I took her to be."—The Argonaut.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Virginia—After 28 years of existence under the name of the Swedish Lutheran church of Virginia, that organization has decided to incorporate under the name of the First Lutheran church of Virginia.

Jasper—Peter Van Vooren is dead from injuries he received when the car he was driving struck the end of a small bridge. John Van Vooren, his brother, was injured but not seriously.

Luverne—The Luverne Kiwanis club has donated a large loving cup to the city schools, as a trophy for annual debate between the seniors and juniors. The first contest for the cup will be conducted within the next few weeks.

Tracy—The case of T. H. Webb against the city of Tracy has been set for trial at the June term of district court at Marshall. Webb seeks to restrain the city from removing a gasoline pump which he has on the walk in front of his garage.

Winona—Mark Campbell, aged 90, resident of this place for 60 years, is dead at his home. He formerly operated a farm near St. Charles. He is survived by two sons, 13 grandchildren and nine great grandchildren. His wife died several years ago.

St. James—J. S. Jones, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation, addresed 25 directors of the Watonwan County Farm bureau here, on pending legislation of interest to farmers. Plans were made for a personal county cleanup drive for more members.

Long Prairie—At a meeting here preliminary to a "better sire" campaign, C. F. Miller, automobile dealer of Long Prairie, who presided at the meeting, made a standing offer of $1,000 in cash to the first township in the county that shall place a purebred sire at the head of every herd.

Grand Rapids—Funeral services for Mr. and Mrs. Obadiah Blakesley, aged 63 and 66 respectively, will be conducted from the home near Warba. Mrs. Blakesley survived her husband only a few hours. Her death was attributed largely to the shock of her husband's death.

Fairmont—Judge E. C. Dean has taken under advisement a case from Jackson county in which Robert B. Hunt, a service man, seeks to oust Jesse Page as janitor of the Jackson county court house and get himself appointed to the position under the soldiers' preference act.

Fairmont—C. F. Crissinger of Manyaska township, Martin county, has achieved another record. He received a check from the Sherburn creamery for $494.88 for cream delivered during January. Mr. Crissinger hung up a record for alfalfa cutting last summer, when he took 25 big loads off eight acres in one cutting, and a little later he made a record profit from a carload of sheep fed and shipped by himself.

Crookston—The fame of the sugar beets raised in the Red River valley is spreading among the western sugar refineries and their eyes are turning in this direction. The pioneer in the promotion of the sugar beet industry in this section was the Chaska Refining company, a Minnesota concern which has been contracting with the farmers for sugar beet acreage.

Winona—Resignation of the Rev. A. T. Wallace, for 3½ years pastor of the First Baptist church of this city, effective April 30, was made public. It is understood the resignation will be accepted at a meeting of the congregation next Sunday, leaving Mr. Wallace free to enter a wider field of work in the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Duluth, which extended him a call last December.

Morris—Fire that threatened a whole business block at the south end of the main street, burned two business buildings. The loss is estimated at between $17,000 and $23,000. If the wind had not favored the firemen, it is believed the entire block would have been destroyed. The "Sugar Bowl," a confectionery store, was completely destroyed, but the stock and equipment was taken from a tire shop and battery station adjoining before the building collapsed.

Red Wing—Turning down by a vote of 7 to 1 a request by manufacturers for a delay of 30 days before taking final action, the city council decided, by the same vote, to go ahead with the construction of a municipal light plant. Bonds were voted for such a plant three years ago, but action as to building it has been deferred pending negotiations with the Wisconsin-Minnesota Light & Power company, in court and out, which finally ended in failure to agree as to rates. It is now proposed to go ahead with the erection of an electric light plant that will serve all the needs of the city, aside from the two local milling companies.

Windom—G. E. Letourneau, postmaster and an old resident of this place, died at his home here after an attack of pneumonia. Mr. Letourneau had resided in Windom for more than 50 years and had been prominent in public affairs.

Winona—Mrs. Louise Seifried, aged 90, pioneer resident, died here of infirmities of age. She was the oldest member of St. Martin's Lutheran congregation of this city. Mrs. Seifried and her husband, who died 17 years ago, arrived in Winona in 1857. She is survived by four children, five grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

DESERVING OF HIGH HONORS

Doctor Wagner of the Darmstadt (Germany) Experiment Station Has Done Much for Agriculture.

Fifty years ago Dr. Paul Wagner became director of the experiment station at Darmstadt, which had just been founded, and has since won for this institution a world renown, through his investigations on plant foods. Doctor Wagner certainly deserves to receive great commendation for having, with the help of his own method of pot experiments, substantially extended, and firmly established the foundation for the use of commercial fertilizers.

He was the first to recognize and correctly estimate the fertilizing effect of the Thomas phosphate or basic slag.

By a steady improvement in the methods of fertilizing experiments in the field, he succeeded in making of these field experiments a practical means of exact investigation.

Doctor Wagner, furthermore, has clearly shown the results of his investigations in the vegetation house, field and laboratory, to the practical farmer, either in articles which are easily understood, or in inspiring lectures; and in this way he has contributed in an enormous degree toward the proper use of commercial fertilizers in agriculture.

Here in the United States many of Doctor Wagner's articles are known, having been translated or summarized by numerous writers, to the great advantage of American agriculture.

Red Tape at Its Highest.

Circumlocution in the civil service is not always the result of the system.

A few weeks ago an official in one department made an inquiry about a certain case to a subordinate official in another section who allowed the matter to slide.

Last week the first official addressed a complaint to the subordinate's superior and the superior passed on the minute to the subordinate with the query, "Has nothing been done?"

The minute was returned marked "Yes" and was sent back to the subordinate with a laconic "What?"

"Nothing," was the subordinate's comment on the minute.

By the time people become thoroughly accustomed to dull times business gets better.

WAS THE FIRST AERIALIST

Flying Squirrel May Be Said to Have Been Forerunner of Parachute and Machine.

No, we are not referring to birds, we mean that shy creature, the flying squirrel. He was the first aerialist and was the forerunner of the parachute and the flying machine, asserts a writer in Our Dumb Animals. It is probable that he taught early experimenters as much about flying as did birds. Do you know any other four-footed animal that flies? This squirrel is by nature a fly-by-night, as he does most of his flying after dark, although he will fly in the daytime if occasion arises. Woodsmen sawing down trees have seen them appear from a hole in a dead limb and fly out to safety before the tree fell. This little animal uses his tail as a rudder to guide him in his flight. He is able to fly because of membranes connecting feet and legs on either side. Some flying squirrels are reddish colored, while others are gray. They are said to make good pets.

No Trouble.

"Poverty is no disgrace." "Yes, and what's more you don't have to pay any income tax on it."

If you would amend men, begin with yourself.

Betrayed by Pores.

Pores are more important than finger prints to the crime investigator. The science of "poroscopy" is now called in when Bertillon methods fail.

The new science, discovered by Dr. Edmond Locard in 1912, has taken eleven years to develop to perfection.

The shape of the pores, not easily recognizable in the case of finger prints obtained by printers' ink, on account of the roughness of these records, is found to be very varied when colorless prints or those revealed by a method employed by Dr. Locard are examined.

Advises Business for Wives.

Mrs. Edward Lazansky, whose husband is a New York Supreme court justice, believes that if more wives had interest in the business world there would be fewer protests when business keeps husbands out of the home. Mrs. Lazansky knows whereof she speaks, since she is the proprietor of a successful interior decorating establishment in New York city.

Something to Think About.

They Spring Up Fast.

August Belmont said at a dinner party in Tuxedo;

"New York is a hustling city, and it is astonishing how fast we can produce aristocrats here.

"I dined the other evening in the new granite palace in Fifth avenue of a war profiteer. It was a magnificent feast, and I said to my hostess after it was over:

"'But I haven't been introduced to your husband yet. He's here, of course?'

"'Well—er—no, he isn't,' said my hostess.

"Then she shrugged her white shoulders and added:

"'You've got to draw the line somewhere, you know.'"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Two Ways of Looking at It.

"Did you know you were behind in your board?" said the landlady.

"No, I didn't," said Poorpay.

"Well, you are. You owe me for a month."

"Oh, I know that, but I considered that I was just that much ahead."—Boston Evening Transcript.

1 COW = 17 STEERS
DE LAVAL

Prosperity Follows the Dairy Cow

Dairying is the surest, safest and most profitable branch of farming, as it increases soil fertility and provides a regular cash income.

De Laval Cream Separators have done more than anything else to make modern dairying possible and the De Laval Users Sign is a mark of prosperity.

For every ton of butter-fat sold, only 70 cents' worth of soil fertility is removed, while the feed to produce it, if sold, would remove $400.00 worth.

A good dairy cow during her lifetime produces as much food as 17 average steers, at a greater income to the farmer.

A full milk pail means cash profits from the sale of cream or butter, and in addition there is the skim-milk—wonderful feed for calves, pigs and chickens.

It pays to raise calves from good cows and this can be done economically by the use of De Laval-separated skim-milk.

The receiving teller at the bank soon knows the farmer who owns a De Laval, because of the cream or butter checks he cashes and the money he deposits for him.

Why not let your cows make more money for you through the use of the De Laval? Ask us about it.

NO OPERATION FOR HER

She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Escaped the Operation Doctor Advised

Louisville, Ky.—"I wish to thank you for what your medicine has done for me. I was in bed for eight or nine days every month and had a great deal of pain. The doctor said my only relief was an operation. I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines and tried the Vegetable Compound and the Sanative Wash, and they surely did wonders for me. I feel fine all the time now, also am picking up in weight. I will tell any one that your medicines are wonderful, and you may publish my letter if you wish."—Mrs. Ed. Boehnlein, 1130 Ash St., Louisville, Ky.

Backache, nervousness, painful times, irregularity, tired and run-down feelings, are symptoms of female troubles. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be taken whenever there is reason to fear such troubles. It contains nothing that can injure, and tends to tone up and strengthen the organs concerned, so that they may work in a healthy, normal manner. Let it help you as it has thousands of others. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now selling almost all over the world.

"NOT PLANNED"

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga, and to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. With his friend, Pelt, a newspaper man, Bartley goes to Circle Lake, the pair becoming the guests of Bob Currie, an old friend. The three visit the Slyke home. Slyke resents Bartley's coming, saying he is satisfied the two men in prison are guilty. Bartley is not. Next morning Slyke is found dead in bed, apparently having shot himself. Miss Potter, the dead man's sister-in-law, the village police chief, Roche, and the family physician, Doctor King, all agree Slyke killed himself, but Bartley insists he was murdered. Investigating, Bartley finds evidence that Slyke, after a card party he had given, was shot on the tower of the house, undressed, and placed in bed. During his absence from the room someone removes the revolver from Slyke's hand. A boy working in the garage asserts he heard a shot during the night, apparently "in the air," of course really on the tower. Ruth, Slyke's step-daughter, still further complicates the case. Pelt interviews the members of the card party. He finds to his surprise that Slyke, apparently wealthy broker, had offered to sell his friends whisky. He finds evidence that the men in jail for attempted robbery of Slyke were "framed."

—9—

"You did not see three glasses, did you?"

"No," he answered, surprised at my question. "No, only two."

Thanking him, I said goodby and left.

When I returned to the newspaper office, I found the files of the past year awaiting me. The story that Rogers told us in Bartley's library, and the account of the crime in the paper were substantially the same. There were, however, one or two slight differences that seemed to me important. I had understood Rogers to say that the step-daughter, Ruth, had positively identified the men now in prison; but nowhere in the newspaper was it stated that this had been the case. What she had actually said was, "I think one of them is the man I saw in the room." There had been no positive identification of the men by her, or by anyone else, for that matter. Slyke himself had testified that he did not know whether they were the men or not.

Three things had convicted them. First, the piece of paper found in the room where the burglary had taken place, and which fitted into a torn corner of a newspaper discovered later in the coat of one of the men; second, the piece of cloth said to have been found on a rose bush beneath the window of the room entered, and which fitted the torn place in a pair of trousers belonging to one of the men—there was some doubt as to whether the trousers had been torn at the time the man was arrested—and last of all, the footprints under the window. Thus their conviction rested on a piece of torn newspaper and a hole in a man's trousers—rather feeble evidence, it seemed to me. Moreover, the police had not discovered any of it until some days after the crime. The more I thought of it, the more I agreed with Bartley that the case was remarkably like that old burglary case in England.

Leaving the newspaper office, I called on some of the other men who had been at the card party. They all agreed that it was Slyke who had suggested Lawrence's staying, and laughed at the idea that he knew anything about his death. One of them told me that, several weeks before, he had bought three cases of whisky from Slyke. I could not understand why a man of Slyke's position should wish to sell whisky to his friends.

As I passed the court house on my way home, I noticed the words "District Attorney's Office" on a window, and it occurred to me that stored away somewhere in there would be the exhibits in the burglary case. I entered and asked to see the torn piece of paper and the bit of cloth. The only person in the room was a boy of eighteen, who went into a back room and returned with a box under his arm. Opening it, he shook out on the desk before me a newspaper, saying, "This is the paper they found in the man's pocket. You can see the torn edge."

He pointed to the front sheet of the newspaper, one corner of which had been torn away. Lifting another piece of paper from the box, this time a small one, he fitted it into the torn corner. I glanced at the heading of the paper. It was a copy of the Boston Evening Times, and the date was that of the day before the burglary.

I felt that I had accomplished very little by my afternoon's work. The only new evidence was Lawrence's statement that Slyke had been expecting some one after he left. I wished that he had accepted Slyke's invitation to remain until this other person came. With the exception of this and Slyke's having offered to sell whisky to two different men, a fact that could have no bearing on the murder, I had found out nothing.

I found Bartley talking with Mrs. Currie, who had returned during the afternoon. I was introduced and we went in to dinner at once.

When the dessert was over and we were drinking our wine and smoking comfortably, Bartley leaned back in his chair with such a deep sigh of contentment that Currie laughed.

"Better than murders, eh, John?"

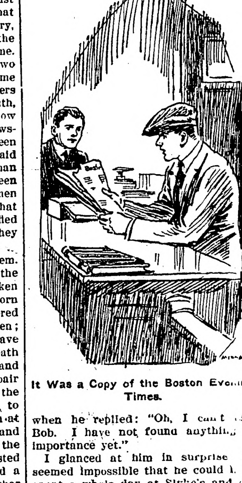
Bartley joined in the laugh. "Anything is."

"I have often wondered," Mrs. Currie said thoughtfully, "what causes people to commit murder. They always get found out."

"Not always, Laura," answered Bartley. "I know it's the opinion of most people that a person who commits murder is discovered in the long run, but that is not true. I should say that about 80 per cent of the murders are never solved. You ask why people kill. As a rule, it is done in rage or in a sudden passion of some kind. Such crimes are easy to solve. It is the small percentage that are planned that are difficult. You see, we first look for the motive of a crime, and if we can find that we can usually solve it."

Currie, who had been listening carefully, broke in with, "I presume you will solve this Slyke affair quickly."

Bartley was silent, watching the smoke of his cigar curl toward the ceiling. His face was expressionless when he replied: "Oh, I can't tell, Bob. I have not found anything of importance yet."



It Was a Copy of the Boston Evening Times.

I glanced at him in surprise. It seemed impossible that he could have spent a whole day at Slyke's and not have discovered something of value.

Mrs. Currie turned to her husband. "Bob, what are you men going to do this evening? You know this is the night of my musicale."

Currie gave such a groan that we all laughed. "There is a long-haired tenor coming here tonight, and a crowd of women who will roll their eyes at him and lie like the devil, murmuring 'How beautiful!' It's no place for us. We'll go to Saratoga and come back when it is all over."

Before we started Currie said he had to give some orders to his men, and Bartley and I went to our rooms. I gave him a brief outline of what I had discovered in Saratoga. He did not ask any questions until I mentioned that the newspaper from which the corner had been torn was a copy of the Boston Evening Times, then he asked the date of the issue. When I told him it was that of the day before the robbery, he took his cigar from his mouth, grinned, and threw out his hands in an expressive gesture.

"That's enough to prove those men had nothing to do with the burglary. You know the Times is an evening paper, and is not sold on the newsstands far from Boston—not up here, at any rate. If a copy of the paper had been mailed here, as it would have to be, it could not have reached Saratoga until hours after the robbery had taken place. Such being the case, the men that broke into the house could not have had it with them, nor could the police have found a piece torn from it in the room the next morning."

I saw his point and was eager to learn what he thought of the other things I had discovered. Above all, I wanted to know what his opinion would be of Lawrence's statement that Slyke was expecting some one to call after he left. To my surprise he was much more interested in the fact of Slyke's having offered the whisky for sale. I had expected, when I had finished with my story, that he would tell me what he had discovered after I left him at Slyke's. But as he did nothing of the sort, I finally found courage to inquire.

"Well, Pelt," he said with a quizzical smile, "there are two things that I want very much to discover. The first thing I would like to know is, what has become of Slyke's chauffeur?"

Seeing I did not understand, he went on: "You know we sent for him but they could not find him. Up to the time I left the house they were still looking for him. Not only that, but the chauffeur and Slyke had a quarrel yesterday afternoon."

"A quarrel?"

"Yes. No one was near enough to hear all that was said, but the cook heard the chauffeur say, 'I don't dare to do it,' and Slyke reply, 'I should have done it before.' The butler, you remember, told us that while we were in the tower he saw the chauffeur on the steps leading to the second story. The chap has disappeared, no one knows where. The police are looking for him and may get him. I hope so. There are a few things I should like to ask him."

"Maybe it was he who took the revolver," I suggested.

"Has it occurred to you that it is a strange thing that a man like Slyke should spend most of his time up here? For the past two years he has lived here almost entirely. His office in New York is closed, and he is rumored to have lost money. Why did he stay here all the year round?"

Bartley suddenly changed the subject. "Miss Potter cleared up one thing for us today. I knew that, if the murderer was shrewd enough to go to the trouble of placing Slyke in bed, he knew enough to know how the eyes should look. Their being closed puzzled me. I wondered how he had made such a mistake. But when Miss Potter told us it was she who had closed them, I knew that I had not been mistaken. Whoever killed Slyke knew what he was doing. There was only one chance in a thousand that he would not get it across."

"It was well planned," I suggested.

"It was not planned at all. It was a sudden impulse, a quarrel. I don't believe that, when the murderer went into that tower room to see Slyke, he had the least idea of killing him."

"But think of the pains he took. It must have been planned."

"No," he replied, "the planning was done afterward."

"After he was killed?"

"Yes. Look at the facts, Pelt. Slyke was killed on the balcony of a tower, fifty feet above the ground. A man who planned a murder would not pick out such a place. It was the last place in the house he would have chosen. Just suppose that some one had heard the shot and investigated. The murderer would have been trapped with the dead body of his victim. To escape he had to go down two flights of stairs and through the big room. Let us say that Slyke invited the man to go upon the balcony—for what, we cannot say—and then they quarreled and the person killed him on the impulse of the moment. The next thing to do was to get rid of the body. Finding the coast clear, he took it into the next room and undressed it, and carried it down to the bedroom and placed it in bed. He knew how a body should look after suicide and that a gun could be placed in its hand."

"He seemed to be pretty sure no one would disturb him at it," I ventured.

Bartley nodded. "Yes, there is no doubt of that. That brings up another astonishing fact. Down in the big room was a young dog that did not like strangers. The murderer, in order to get out of the house, had to go through that room, yet the dog did not bark."

"Then it was someone in the house!" I interrupted.

"The coolness with which the murderer took plenty of time in undressing the body and the fact that he did not seem to be afraid of being found out makes it seem probable. Why didn't the dog bark? Because he knew whoever it was. That makes it seem as if it were someone in the house, or at least as if it were someone that knew both the house and the dog well.

"Of course, Pelt, until we discover the motive we cannot get very far. At present there seems to be none. There is nothing missing and no apparent reason for Slyke's murder. It seems an absurd sort of a crime. That's why I think it was done on impulse, not premeditated." He thought a moment, then added, "I did think I knew the kind of a person that might have committed a crime like this. But—"

"But what?" I asked eagerly.

He opened the door with a little smile on his lips, and it was not until we were half way down stairs that he completed his sentence, "But—I don't know."

> "He removed the paper and disclosed the label of a well-known brand of imported whisky."

BOND PAYMENT FUNDS SHIFTED

Homebuilders Indebtedness to Bank Reduced by Using Tax Income.

COMMISSION RETIRED

Money Shifted to Bank Has Been Idle Because No Home Building Bonds Are Being Issued—Last Case Before Court.

Bismarck, N. D.—Transfer of $60,000 from the Home Building association bond payment fund to the Home Building association has been ordered by the state industrial commission for the purpose of permitting the association to reduce its indebtedness to the Bank of North Dakota.

The money, raised by taxation, has been lying unused in the state treasury because no home building association bonds were issued, and will not be issued, and will not be needed in the future because the legislature voted to wind up the affairs of the association. The transfer was made under the law permitting this to be done.

The association's indebtedness to the Bank of North Dakota consists of $413,000 in principal and $27,000 interest was due January 1. The $60,000 will pay interest due and reduce the principal.

Settlement of the affairs of the association will not begin generally until after July 1, since the emergency clause was lost on the bill passed by the legislature. By that time, it is expected, the supreme court will have again passed on the case of George E. Wallace, for whom a home was built in Bismarck, and the decision may be of assistance in determining upon a polcy of final settlement for homes built by the association.

CHINESE CAPTIVE IS HOME

Minnesota Clergyman Has Thrilling Experiences While a Captive.

Minneapolis—With a thrilling tale of adventure, in which he was held captive by Chinese bandits for two months last fall, the Rev. Anton M. Lundeen, former Minnesota resident and missionary to China, arrived in Minneapolis.

Mr. Lundeen and the Rev. C. O. Forsberg were captured October 13 when 18,000 bandits swarmed into the walled city of Juchow, in the province of Honan, in central China, where their mission was located. They were released in December after their capture had attracted world-wide attention.

During those two months they were forced to march thousands of miles with the bandits, who laid waste the country through which they passed. Sometimes the captives were given horses or mules to ride, without saddles, but most of the time they were forced to walk.

"Cut off his ears, kill him," robbers yelled when Mr. Lundeen was being questioned by their chieftain one day.

Mr. Lundeen and Mr. Forsberg were ordered by the bandits to make guns for them—and they nearly lost their lives when they tried to explain that they did not know how.

BORAH WANTS WORLD COURT

Does Not Want Court Dominated by Europe.

New York—If the United States outlined its position as in favor of a world court of real power and jurisdiction, Europe would agree to transform the present court which is practically powerless except at the special behest of the nations, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, declared in an address before the Bond club.

Senator Borah said his position in regard to the world court, entrance into which he was recently urged by President Harding, had been misunderstood.

"I am thoroughly in favor of the United States becoming a member of an international court," said the senator, "provided it is a bonafide court and relieved of the political domination of Europe."

TO LIQUIDATE U. S. SHIP LINE

Meeting Called to Discuss Plans for Closing Out Fleet.

Washington—All interests identified with the American merchant marine invited by the shipping board to assist in the formulation of a policy which will make possible "the liquidation of the government fleet and the taking over by private interests of such routes as show prospects of becoming self sustaining."

March Cold Records Broken.

Chicago—A marked moderation in temperature with a bright sun shining in some places and a forecast of "fair and warmer" registered the end of one of the most severe March snow storms that the Great Lakes region and the Mississippi valley has ever known. New low temperature records for late March were established in many places throughout the middle west when the storm swept through this region on its way from Alakasa to the southern part of the United States.

From Virginia there comes a story of a very fat guest in an overcrowded hotel who was forced to spend the night on a wire cot minus blankets and mattress.

When he came down in the morning the clerk asked him:

"Well, how did you sleep last night?"

"Oh, I slept all right," the fat person assured him, "but I certainly looked like a waffle when I got up this morning."

Gas for the Forgetful Motorist.

Every motorist has had the sad experience of forgetting to replenish the gas-tank, and of being marooned—usually miles from nowhere on a stormy night—without any of the precious go-juice to get home with. We have one acquaintance who boasts of his predilection toward this sort of thing. His car carries an auxiliary two-gallon container, but this is of no avail. After it is filled, the owner travels until he is halted by "no gas"; then he empties the auxiliary supply into the main tank, travels to the nearest gas station, and fills up again. But he invariably forgets to fill the auxiliary tank; so every alternate failure of his car to run without gas leaves him stranded and an object for the good Samaritan.—Scientific American.

Mrs. Gross Praises Tanlac for Overcoming Stomach Trouble of Long Standing—Says Results Are Priceless.

"Before I took Tanlac I only weighed ninety-four pounds and scarcely had strength to sweep the floor or make the beds; but now I weigh one hundred and thirty-two and am as healthy and happy as can be." This remarkable statement was made, recently, by Mrs. Mabel Gross, 1137 Aldrich St., N., Minneapolis, Minn.

"For nearly two years I had been in a seriously weakened condition and suffered nearly all the time from headache and backache. My nerves were beyond my control and I was terribly dizzy. I couldn't half sleep and my stomach was so out of order that even the sight of food nauseated me.

"The benefits I have received from Tanlac are priceless. I am now a perfectly well woman and my friends often speak of how healthy I look. I certainly have a great deal to praise Tanlac for. Health is worth everything, and that is what Tanlac has meant to me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

Idea for Students.

A couple of high school principals were discussing various manifestations bordering on the occult.

"Is thought transference possible?" asked one.

"I fear not," answered the other.

"You seem to think there is no chance."

"No; if there were my students would hire a college professor to sit in class."

Litchfield—John Brandt is the new president of the Minnesota Co-operative Creameries association. He was elected at the reecnt annual meeting in St. Paul. He has indorsed the projected national milk product selling agency planned by the committee of nine.

Bemidji—Officials of the Crookston Lumber company sounded the keynote of returning prosperity in an announcement that the big lumber mill of that concern would open day and night shifts for the coming season on March 26 and from that date the mill will be operated to its capacity during the year.

St. Cloud—Speaking at a missionary conference here Miss Elizabeth Roberts of Minneapolis, who is a missionary in Korea, said: "Christianity has raised the standards of the Korean people. The men are now willing to have the women receive the same education that they do. The men take no interest in politics but it is their highest aim to become learned students."

Little Falls—Directors of the Elks' home association of the Elks' lodge signed a contract with Fisher & Jackson, architects of Bemidji, for plans and supervision of construction of an Elks' home. The structure will be of Colonial style, will cost $60,000. The furnishing will cost an additional $15,000. The home is to be built this summer.

Brainerd—Mose Mohlum, president of the Mohlum Lumber company, of Brainerd, was elected to head the newly organized District 14 of the Northwestern Lumbermen's association. Representatives from 35 yards were present. The Brainerd district now includes Crow Wing, Cass, Aitkin and parts of Morison counties. Three directors elected were T. B. Brusegaard of Brainerd, Neil Woodworth of Little Falls, and Walter Knox of Aitkin.

Owatonna—Members of Owotanna's Women's clubs and of the board of eduaction are uniting in a movement to educate aliens in Steel county who are prospective citizens. As a result of efforts of the clubs to get action along this line, the school board will open classes in citizenship and English for those seeking naturalization, and the women's clubs will provide a correspondence course for those who cannot take up the study here.

St. Cloud—Following the action of the St. Cloud Auto club in donating $500 toward the erection of a Welcome Arch where the Jefferson highway enters this city, the city commissioners have voted to maintain the lights for the arch. Business men will take care of the remainder of the expense. In adition to directing tourists into the Granite City for about six months each year, the arch, with its electric lighted letters of welcome, will give a constant flood of light over a spot in the highway that is dangerous.

Worthington—Mr. and Mrs. Peter Thompson of Worthington will celebrate their 63d wedidng anniversary. Mr. Thompson came to Minnesota when it was still a territory and Minneapolis a village. For several seasons he was engaged in river traffic on the Minnesota river. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were married at Carver, March 18, 1860, and removed immediately to what is now Kandiyohi county. A year later they were driven out by the Indians, who burned their homes and killed their cattle. In 1871, Mr. Thompson helped lay out the city of Worthington, and was the first person to buy a city lot here.

Little Falls—Authorities of Columbia school enthusiastically support a plan to introduce milk lunches as a means of increasing the weight of pupils who are underweight. Ninety-eight out of 152 pupils began their milk lunches.

Hayfield—Plans are being made for the dedication of the new Trinity Lutheran church, construction of which was recently completed. The dedication proper will take place on Sunday, April 29, but it will be linked up with a three-day festival, April 29 and 30 and May 1.

Buffalo—Albert Boerner, mayor of this city for the last four years, was defeated by A. W. Anderson in the election here by a majority estimated at 50 votes. All other candidates were elected without opposition.

Hibbing — Game Warden George Wood has warned fishermen that they must wait until April 1 before fishing. The season on all varieties of game fish with the exception of trout, closed on March 1. On April 15, the trout season begins and the ban on all varieties of fish is lifted on May 15, with the exception of black bass, which are protected until June 15.

Floodwood—Mrs. M. N. Triplett, the new postmistress, took over the new Floodwood postoffice. The office now has a new location on Seventh avenue.

Cannon Falls—Cannon Falls high school debating team unanimously won their debate with Minneapolis Central high school. The local team had the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved, that the Kansas type of industrial court should be established in Minnesota."

Faribault—Closing with an attendance of 1,000 people, the second annual building show is considered to have been a success. The show was supported by about 40 exhibitors in the building trades. A chamber of commerce committee had charge of the show.

Duluth—Consolidation of nine match companies, including the Union Match and Minnesota Match companies at Duluth in a $6,000,000 corporation, to be known as the Federal Match company, has been announced by L. A. Sherwood, president of the National Match company at Joliet, Ill., as president of the merger.

Ely—When a warrant for wife desertion was presented to Matt Spreitzer, an employe of the Selms, Helmers & Scaffner construction company on the dam near Winton, he grabbed his pocket knife and slashed his throat. He was brought to the Shipman hospital here, where his condition is said to be serious.

Duluth—Duluth is making preparations for the next attraction which will be the Duluth builders' show at the armory. M. A. Dunning, chairman of the show committee has announced that a prominent part of the exhibit will be devoted to building hardware. The dates of the show are April 2 to 7.

Alexandria—The heaviest vote ever cast in a municipal election was cast when 1,179 voters went to the polls. Dr. A. D. Haskell was elected mayor by a majority of 317 over Dr. J. A. McCabe, the votes being 698 and 381 respectively. E. W. Johnson and W. E. Nesbitt were re-elected aldermen in the third and fifth wards, respectively.

Duluth—Miss Vivian Camburn of Duluth is the only woman in St. Louis county who has received a trapper's license this year. Miss Camburn has established an enviable record as a long distance hiker. The youngest trapper of the year is 14-year-old Wilko Tailpial of Palo, Minn., and Matt Eikkala, of Sandy, 80 years of age, is the oldest.

International Falls — John Moe, charged with the slaying of Coral Brown of Lohman, Minn., last spring, was found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree after deliberating for more than 17 hours. Brown was murdered on July 9, 1922. It was brought out at a preliminary hearing that Moe killed Brown because he was "keeping company" with Moe's sister-in-law.

St. Cloud—Search for the "phantom speed cop" of the Jefferson paved highway, who has impersonated a motorcycle patrolman for the past 10 months, and levied illegal fines said to aggregate more than $5,000 on tourists and residents of central Minnesota, led to this place. His arrest is a matter of a short time, according to Deputy Sheriff Lester Morfitt of Benton county.

Virginia—The payment of more than $5,000 due the Mountain Iron General Contracting company by St. Louis county and the forfeiture of more than $18,500 in bonds carried by the Maryland Casualty company for the Mountain Iron firm to satisfy the bills of 57 creditors, has been ordered by Judge Edward Freeman. Judge Freeman ordered $5,000 due the firm by the county, and bonds to be delivered to the clerk of district court so that official disposition of the claims outstanding might be made.

Owatonna—Steele county, boasted as "the world's richest agricultural community" by its citizens because of its bank deposits of approximately $400 for each man, woman and child, and because these deposits are largely due to the income from dairying, produced just 5,714,224 pounds of butter during 1922. This was the total production of 23 co-operative creameries in the county for the year recently closed, a recapitulation of reports of these institutions shows. For this production the creameries received $2,078,796. The creameries averaged 225,536 pounds of butter in their manufactures.

Owatonna — Members of Kenyon post, American legion, have asked the village council to unite with them in establishing a tourist camp near the village. The post also plans the construction of a swimming pool for village youngsters. In its efforts to arrange for the tourist camp the post promises to do all necessary construction work at the camp if the council will furnish the lumber for buildings and rent the necessary land.

Duluth—W. T. Irwin, Virginia, was elected president of the St. Louis County Poultry association at its organization meeting. "Under the county association both Duluth and the range poultry association become one," said A. S. Grant, county agent, who was elected secretary of the organization. "Both organizations have agreed to dissolve as soon as they are able to close their books in favor of the larger county organization."

Two Harbors—Joseph Ilgen has obtained a patent on an autoplane which he has designed. The vehicle has the body and fuslilage of an airplane with a small wing over the rear of the machine. It has three wheels, two in front and one in the back. The power is delivered to the front wheels. It is designed so that when enough speed is reached the rear end will lift from the ground but the front wheels will remain on the road. With but two wheels on the ground, the inventor claims that it will be easy riding. It is steered by a rudder acting in the same manner as an airplane rudder.

BUSINESS WISDOM

Pray—and sweat.

Before accumulation, renunciation.

Everybody delights in bringing down the overheady.

To salesmen: To win out, go out, stay out, fight it out.

Are you conscientiously paying your debt to the world?

To reach and stay in the van, have no silly vanity.

An airship will fall if its propelling power ceases. You, too.

To do your work successfully, cultivate light, not heat.

The best blend of all is unconquerable faith and infinite modesty.

The gun that make most noise doesn't always shoot best.

Some employers are more anxious to be profit-sharers than profit-earners.

The final question shall be not, How much have you? but, How much have you done?

Without righteousness there can be no twenty-four carat success; only tinsel success.

Pray more to give happiness, less to get it—and, lo! it will come in as you send it out.

You would please God? Then please His children your fellow mortals, especially those whose pleasures are few.

We earn money and we spend it and it seems to leave no trace, but the way we earn and spend it forms habits that make or mar our characters.

It is a better thing to think to puzzle, and blunder our way through the moral, social and religious difficulties of our age than to lie back comfortably and be carried along in the conveyance of ready-made and handed down opinions.

for a series of talks to its patrons, its employes, and the general public concerning transportation problems common to all.

There is an old saying that you can not hate a man when you are well acquainted with him. Let us get better acquainted and cultivate good will. The entire business activity of the Great Northern's territory is so dependent upon good transportation at low rates that no farmer or business man can afford to be hostile to the Great Northern. Every blow aimed at the railroad, every act of the legislature imposing needless regulations or burdens of expense upon the railroad, damages other business and agriculture as surely as if aimed directly at them. What hurts them, hurts the railroad, and what hurts the railroad hurts them.

If their business is poor, the earnings of the railroad decrease; and if the railroad's business is poor or if its expenses are needlessly increased, that is a double injury to other business: First, it stops the enlargement and improvement of facilities necessary to furnish good railroad service when needed; and second, it makes higher rates necessary, because whatever increases the cost of producing transportation adds ultimately to the expense of other business. In the end, all transportation costs must be paid by the public.

Good feeling is an essential to the success of all partnerships. This one includes not only the railroad and all the people along its lines, but all railroad employes as well. If they will think well and speak well of their employer, realizing that whatever hurts one hurts the other, it will help amazingly to prevent misunderstanding and promote the welfare of both.

It will be our aim in subsequent talks to make these truths clear and plain to everyone.

Farmers Take Notice

The Marshall County State Bank has been investigating the possibilities of organizing an Alfalfa Association in this locality in the furthering of the raising of alfalfa. We are all aware of the value of alfalfa for a stock feed and the possibilities of several crops during the summer.

Not only does this crop hold good for feed, but it also is valuable for its seed. Norwestern Minnesota is rated by Agricultural experts as the most adaptable territory in Minnesota for the raising of Grim Alfalfa. It appears that we have the natural resources for this project.

Due to the fact that most of the land is not in condition for a large acreage of alfalfa, we are very anxious that a start is made by our good farmers and to increase from year to year.

We make this suggestion that those who are interested in seeing this movement started in this locality will so state their views to others and talk the matter over with the bank. We shall make the necessary arrangements for organizing and in getting speakers here to talk on the subject. Arrangements are being made for a speaker in the near future. Look for Announcements.

51% Are De Lavals

The overwhelming number of De Laval Cream Separators in use is proved in a striking and forceful way by three recent investigations conducted by disinterested people, covering most of the principal butter-producing states:

(1) From an investigation conducted by the Purdue Agriculturist (Indiana), Iowa Agriculturist, Cornell Countryman (New York), Agricultural Student (Ohio), Penn State Farmer, Tennessee Farmer, published by the students of the various agricultural colleges in question, and their readers, who received the questionnaire, are either graduates or former students:

64.8% use cream separators of the following makes:

50.6%—De Laval.
16.8%—Nearest competitor.

(2) Sixty-two per cent of the cream separators on 333 representative Minnesota dairy farms, selected at random and over a wide area, are De Lavals, according to a survey recently made by The Farmer, of St. Paul.

De Laval—62%.
Nearest competitor—6.4%.

(3) From the Dairy Farm Survey of Hoard's Dairyman (the foremost dairy paper in the world, having a circulation of approximately 85,000 at the time of this investigation).

Have you a cream separator?
80.90%—Yes.
What make?
41.18%—De Laval.
16.74%—Nearest competitor.

51.26%—average number of De Lavals, based on the foregoing, which confirms the well-known statement that there are about as many De Lavals in use as all the rest combined.

The only reason there are so many more De Lavals in use is that it is the best separator—skims cleaner, lasts longer, and is easier to clean and turn.

SAVED LIFE SAYS MRS. WAGENAAR

Portland Lady Fell Off 40 Pounds, but Declares Tanlac Restored Her Fully.

"For nine years," declared Mrs. Ella Wagenaar, 268 Graham St., Portland, Ore., recently, "I was almost a nervous wreck and never knew what it was to feel well.

"I was suffering from a general breakdown and, oh, it's just impossible to describe the pain and misery I endured. My stomach was so disordered I could scarcely retain a morsel of solid food. I lost forty pounds and was so weak I tottered like an infant when I walked. Many nights I never slept a wink, and I had weak spells, when I fainted dead away.

"After spending over a thousand dollars trying to get well, my husband finally persuaded me to take the Tanlac treatment. Well, that was the turning point, for all my troubles are gone now, I have almost regained my lost weight, and I've never enjoyed finer health. I will always believe Tanlac saved my life, and I'm so happy and grateful that I just can't help praising it."

WHISKY RUNNERS

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga, and to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. With his friend, Pelt, a newspaper man, Bartley goes to Circle Lake, the pair becoming the guests of Bob Currie, an old friend. The three visit the Slyke home. Slyke resents Bartley's coming, saying he is satisfied the two men in prison are guilty. Bartley is not. Next morning Slyke is found dead in bed, apparently having shot himself. Miss Potter, the dead man's sister-in-law, the village police chief, Roche, and the family physician, Doctor King, all agree Slyke killed himself, but Bartley insists he was murdered. Investigating, Bartley finds evidence that Slyke, after a card party he had given, was shot on the tower of the house, undressed, and placed in bed. During his absence from the room someone removes the revolver from Slyke's hand. A boy working in the garage asserts he heard a shot during the night, apparently "in the air," of course really on the tower. Ruth, Slyke's stepdaughter, still further complicates the case. Pelt interviews the members of the card party. He finds to his surprise that Slyke, apparently wealthy broker, had offered to sell his friends whisky. He finds evidence that the men in jail for attempted robbery of Slyke were "framed." Bartley decides the murder was not planned in advance.

CHAPTER VI

—10—

The Vault in the Woods.

We found Currie waiting for us in one of his large cars, with his chauffeur. There were few cars on the road, and in a very short time we arrived in Saratoga.

We left the car before one of the hotels and followed Bartley to the public library. Bartley spent several moments glancing through the card catalogue before he crossed to the loan desk, and asked the pretty young librarian for "Griffeth's Mysteries of Crimes." She returned in a moment with two volumes, bound in red cloth. Bartley opened one to the place where the date when a book is taken out is stamped. There was only one date on the white slip, and Bartley copied it in his notebook. Then, turning to the librarian, he asked her how they had happened to buy the book, and if she knew who it was that had taken it from the library the one time it had gone out.

Looking through her cards, she told him that the book had been a gift, and that the only person that had ever taken it out was James Briffeur. Bartley raised his eyebrows in surprise but did not ask her anything more.

As soon as we were again on the street, he told us that so far as he knew the only account of the Edlingham burglary, other than the one in the rare pamphlet that he owned, had been published in the volumes he had been glancing at. Currie, of course, did not understand what he was talking about; and Bartley gave him the details of the English crime, and ended by saying that, from the very first it had been his opinion that whoever had faked the burglary at Slyke's had read the account of the English crime. Then, with a little rueful smile, he added that the one person who had taken the book from the library was Slyke's chauffeur.

He might have said more had we not reached Currie's club just then. We sat and talked until about eleven o'clock; then we started to walk home.

As we were leaving the club, we met a young man whom Currie introduced to us as Captain Lowe, commander of the local branch of the state police. As he was going in our direction, we fell into step together; and he told us of his work and how the state troopers had reduced crime so much that farmers' wives now had a sense of security, even in the most remote country districts. The greatest trouble they had at present, he told us with a laugh, was with the smuggling of whisky, not only into Saratoga but even as far as Albany and Troy. Though they knew that a good deal of whisky was getting through, they could not discover who was running it. At the barracks he bade us goodnight.

As we passed the driveway that led into the Slyke grounds, Currie told us that it ran through nearly a mile of dense woods before it reached the house. We were about a thousand feet beyond the entrance when Bartley suddenly stopped.

"What's that?" he asked in a low voice.

I listened a moment, but the only thing I could hear was the horn of a distant automobile.

Bartley continued, "I thought I heard a car in the woods, there on the left."

Currie, who was a few feet in front of us, laughed. "John," he said, "you're hearing things. No car can be in those woods. Those are the trees you see from my house, and they stretch for some miles without a break. Slyke owns this part of them. You could not have heard a car."

Bartley placed his hand on his friend's shoulder. "That's what I thought, Bob. But I did hear a motor; of that I am sure."

He paused, then added suddenly, "Listen! There it is once more."

This time we all heard the faint sound of a motor running slowly and with difficulty. There was no doubt of it; it came from the woods before us. It sounded as if a car were running a few feet, then stopping, as it would do on a very bad road when having difficulty in getting through.

As we stood listening to the strange sound coming through the woods, Bartley said: "You say, Currie, that there is no road there, yet by the sound of it I should say that was a truck. What do you say to going and finding out what it means?"

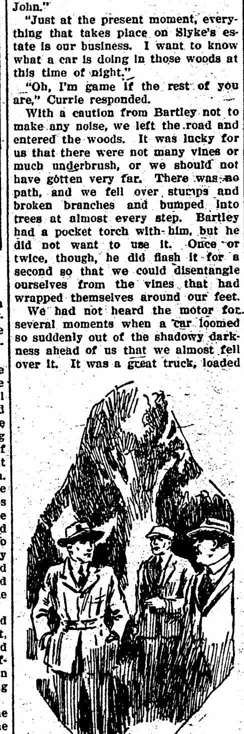
Currie gave an exclamation of disgust. "But it's none of our business, John."

"Just at the present moment, everything that takes place on Slyke's estate is our business. I want to know what a car is doing in those woods at this time of night."

"Oh, I'm game if the rest of you are," Currie responded.

With a caution from Bartley not to make any noise, we left the road and entered the woods. It was lucky for us that there were not many vines or much underbrush, or we should not have gotten very far. There was no path, and we fell over stumps and broken branches and bumped into trees at almost every step. Bartley had a pocket torch with him, but he did not want to use it. Once or twice, though, he did flash it for a second so that we could disentangle ourselves from the vines that had wrapped themselves around our feet.

We had not heard the motor for several moments when a car loomed so suddenly out of the shadowy darkness ahead of us that we almost fell over it. It was a great truck, loaded with small cases. Upon its top, a little darker than the night, we made out the figures of two men, while a third disentangled itself from the gloom in front of the car with a muffled oath, and climbed to the driver's seat. The car started forward with a lunge along the road, if it could be called such, that had been made by felling trees and leaving their stumps still standing. The driver must have been familiar with it, for no one who was not could have driven that truck over it without lights.



"John," He Said, "You're Hearing Things."

"I want to get the number," Bartley whispered, as it lurched ahead.

He crept softly up behind the slowly moving car. For the faintest part of a second I saw the flash of his light. The next he was back at our side.

"There is no license plate on the car. There's something wrong there. Come along!"

As the truck, lurching from side to side, was not going faster than three miles an hour, we had no difficulty in keeping up with it. We had followed it for perhaps five minutes when it came out suddenly onto the road that Currie said led to Slyke's house. Here it paused, the motor running softly. We crept closer and heard a voice say, "Well, Jim, here's to luck. We will make a run of it."

Just at this moment Currie tripped over a root. He tried to save himself, grabbed at my arm, missed, and went to the ground with a loud crash. As he fell, Bartley jerked me to one side and threw me on my face. The sound of Currie's fall was like a young earthquake, and did not escape those on the truck. As I went down I saw one of the men turn and fire. The next second, gaining speed with every foot, the truck shot down the road.

With the truck gone we no longer needed to hide; we rose and rushed to Currie to see if he were shot. As Bartley's light flashed over him, we discovered that he was sitting up, and swearing to himself. His face was covered with dirt and one eye was beginning to turn black, but he was otherwise unhurt.

"John," he demanded, "what the devil made that tire explode?"

"That was not a tire, Bob. Someone on the truck heard you as you fell and took a shot at you."

"Took a shot at me?" cried Currie, in utter disbelief. "My G—, why?"

Bartley helped him to his feet and brushed the dirt from his clothes before he answered: "It's a darned good thing they missed you. Those men on top of the boxes were there to protect them. I wonder what was in them."

Bartley was anxious to learn what that truck was doing in the woods, and why the men on it were so determined that no one should know what they were carrying, that they were willing to fire upon anyone who interfered. As we followed the tracks with the aid of Bartley's pocket torch, we saw that the wheels had sunk a foot into the sod in places, and that more than one heavily loaded truck had passed this way.

We followed the road for about half a mile before it ended in a clearing, a quarter of an acre square.

Bartley examined the four sides of the clearing carefully before he came back to us and said, in a voice that sounded strange in the darkness, "The road ends here. I have an idea that this is where they got their load."

Currie had been peering through the darkness as the flashes of Bartley's light shot between the trees. "I have a fool idea, John," he said slowly, "that I know where we are."

"You do?" came the eager response.

"Yes. If I am not mistaken, we are within a hundred yards of the old cemetery that is on Slyke's ground. It must be over a hundred years old, and was founded by the early settlers. Several years ago Slyke showed me the place. We had the devil of a time reaching it, for there was no path to it. All there is left of it is an old vault and half a dozen stumbling tombstones."

I was unable to see Bartley's face, but his voice was eager.

"A vault! What kind?" he asked.

"Why," replied Currie, "just a vault. One of those things dug into the side of a hill where dead bodies are placed. If I am right, there is a small hill only a few yards from here."

Bartley turned and, flashing his light on the ground, moved it slowly back and forth as he advanced. He paused and bent to examine the ground.

"I guess I have it," he called to us. "Here are footprints."

Without giving us time to examine them, he went deeper into the woods, and we followed. Some fifty feet from the clearing, the little path we were on ended abruptly in a small mound.

"It's your vault, Currie," said Bartley.

His light rested on the massive wooden door of an old-fashioned burial vault dug out of the hillside and fastened securely by a large lock. As Bartley examined it, he gave a little whistle. "Well, Currie, that may be an old vault, and an old door, but the lock on it is modern. It has been placed there within a short time. I am going to open it."

With a thin piece of wire and a bit of steel, Bartley picked the lock, then flung the door open and turned his flashlight into the darkness within. I think that Currie and myself both held our breath as the light swept back and forth over the walls and floor. It disclosed nothing more startling than a number of boxes, similar to those we had seen on the truck, piled one on the other against the walls. It was plain enough where the load had been gotten.

Bartley led the way in and closed the door behind us. Once more he swept the vault with his torch, and this time we noticed a lantern on a box and lit it.

The vault was about twenty-five feet long and had been dug into the side of the hill, but the sides and roof were of stone. Along the walls were niches for coffins, and these were piled high, and the floor as well, with hundreds of small boxes. The flame of the lantern flickered in a draft and queer shadows danced on the walls, while a musty, earthy smell rose half chokingly. It was not the most pleasant place to be in.

But Bartley did not seem to mind it. He stood in the center of the floor, glancing around the vault with such an amused smile that I knew that something had pleased him particularly. Suddenly he went to the nearest box, ripped off the cover, and drew out a bottle. We crowded around him as he removed the paper and disclosed the label of a well-known brand of imported whisky.

"That's what I expected," Bartley commented. "We know now what was on that truck. Captain Lowe won't have to hunt any longer for the place where they hide smuggled whisky."

Currie cried, "Why, it's Slyke's chauffeur!"

ROME MEETING TALKS PEACE

AMERICANS ARE THERE

Hugo Stinnes, German Capitalist, in Rome to Confer with Mussolini —Experts Agree That U. S. Is Place for Conference.

Rome—From conversations with Hugo Stinnes, Germany's great industrial figure, has had with the American delegates to the congress of the international chamber of commerce, it appears that he came to Rome when he heard of American proposals that a portion of all of the war debts owing to the United States would be remitted after the European states had given assurances they would put their finances in order.

Stinnes Reticent.

While Stinnes refused to grant an interview, saying he had no statement to make, it is learned that he is in favor of the American suggestion to call an international economic conference at which all the countries interested would be represented by delegates having full powers in order to be able definitely to solve the reparations debt and exchange stabilization questions.

He is reported as believing the United States is the country best adapted for the conference, being outside Europe and unaffected by the influences of the contending parties.

Many Influential Men There.

Herr Stinnes is said to be desirous of enlisting the support of Premier Mussolini, in the hope that his influence might have a decisive effect on the attitude of most of the other countries.

The Tribuna, commenting on the presence of Stinnes in Rome, thinks it is connected with the presence of so many influential figures in the world of commerce and finance, especially Americans.

BANK TO PAY DEPOSITORS

Oil Well on Property of Closed Bank to Provide Funds.

Okmulgee, Okla.—Luck changed for the "luckless" depositors of the defunct Bank of Commerce of Okmulgee when the magic of oil intervened.

The bank closed its doors November 22, 1921, unable to meet its obligations, and since then depositors had given up hope of ever having their money restored to them.

But the twist of fate that makes millionaires out of washerwomen and plodding farmers overnight in Oklahoma has revived dead hopes. A two hundred barrel oil well has been drilled on land owned by the defunct bank. The bank will receive the regular one-eighth royalty and the money will go to wipe out the losses of creditors of the bank.

According to W. H. Crume, liquidating agent, 3,300 depositors have an interest in the well.

It was the failure of the Bank of Commerce that brought about the indictment of J. B. A. Robertson, former governor of Oklahoma, on a charge of accepting a bribe to permit an insolvent bank to operate. The indictment has been dismissed.

MOVIE PROMOTER IN BAD

New York—The district attorney's office has begun an investigation into promises to prospective students alleged to have been made by "Al" Gilbert, a legless man, who heads the Rising Sun Production, Inc., and who was said to have advertised a $50 course in movie acting. Gilbert appeared in a wheel chair at the hearing, which was adjourned in order that he might produce incorporation papers.

A number of complaints, including Henry Medrini, a bus boy at the cafe Royal, appeared against Gilbert. Madrini, who admitted ambitions to become a movie star, said Gilbert had spoken glowingly of giving promising pupils parts in a $200,000 screen drama "Five Years in Hell" which he planned to produce.

Another pupil quoted Gilbert as saying that "Iliador, the Mad Monk," was to star in the drama which was "one of those thrillers that would make people grasp their chairs and gasp for air while there was shown vivid pictures of an inferno that would outdante Dante's original and make the audience's hearts throb and actually smell brimstone."

Gilbert, who was accompanied by his lawyer, said there was nothing questionable about his plan for the production.

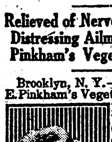
WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Relieved of Nervousness and Other Distressing Ailments by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound four years ago, and am taking it now for the Change of Life and other troubles and I receive great benefit from it. I am willing to let you use my letter as a testimonial because it is the truth. I found your booklet in my letter-box and read it carefully, and that is how I came to take the Vegetable Compound myself. It has given me quiet nerves so that I sleep all night, and a better appetite. I have recommended it already to all my friends and relatives."—Mrs. ENGLEMANN, 2032 Palmetto St., Ridgewood, Brooklyn, N.Y.

For the woman suffering from nervous troubles causing sleeplessness, headache, hysteria, "the blues," Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine. For the woman of middle age who is passing through the trials of that period, it can be depended upon to relieve the troubles common at that time.

Remember, the Vegetable Compound has a record of nearly fifty years of service and thousands of women praise its merit, as does Mrs. Englemann. You should give it a fair trial now.

He says he has smoked more Edgeworth than any other living man

Let Mr. Baldwin's letter give you the facts, and you will see he has some justification for his claims.

Gentlemen:

I think that I am entitled to be called a charter member of the Edgeworth Smokers Club, as I have used the Edgeworth Sliced Plug between twenty and twenty-five years.

When I commenced using it I was selling hardware on the road. One of my customers who kept a general store told me that he had just received a new tobacco and wished that I would try it. He gave me a box for which he charged me 20c. He made a mistake, as it was selling at that time for 25c. I liked it so well that I made it a point to ask for it in every store in the different towns that I made; but few had it. The next time that I called on this customer I bought six boxes, which would last until I got around again. I still continued to ask for it in the different towns and tried to induce the dealers to stock it.

In 1906 or 1907 I went to So. Carolina and stayed there three years. I was surprised not to be able to get it there. At that time I was in Beaufort, S. C., and made frequent trips to Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C. and was unable to get it in either of these cities. Finally I ordered some direct from you and also induced a dealer in Beaufort to stock it.

I have used it always for over twenty years except occasionally when I could not get it. I figure that I have smoked over 1000 of the 25c boxes, which have cost for the last few years 85c. For at least five years I have not bought a cigar. Have had some given to me, but they do not take the place of the old pipe filled with Edgeworth.

I am sixty-one years of age and still think that it is the best tobacco on the market. I don't think there is a man living who has smoked any more Edgeworth than I. What do you think?

Yours truly,
(Signed) H. F. Baldwin

It is always pleasing to hear from old Edgeworth smokers, and we would like to know if this record is the best ever made.

But we are interested, too, in new Edgeworth smokers. We like to know that young men, men who are breaking in their first pipes, find Edgeworth before they get very far in their pipe-smoking careers.

So we have a standing invitation to send free samples of Edgeworth to all who ask for them. If you haven't tried Edgeworth, we have a sample package here containing Plug Slice and Ready-Rubbed that is only waiting for your name and address.

When you write for it, address Larus & Brother Company, 73 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Madison—The charter commission is now at work framing a new charter to be voted upon at Madison soon. The commission has decided to adopt the council form of government instead of the proposed city manager plan.

Brainerd—Mrs. William G. Gumaer, aged 84, who died here, during her childhood attended the same school as John D. Rockefeller and Mark Hanne, who resided four houses away from the home of her father, James P. Kelley of Cleveland, Ohio.

Owatonna—At an open meeting of the Creamery Operators and Managers association of District No. 10 here, Professor C. B. Dahle of University farm spoke on government requirements for butter.

Frontenac—The farm bureau meeting here was marked by the debut of the newly organized Frontenac Cornet band. J. Richard Olson of Minneapolis was the principal speaker at the meeting.

Albert Lea—Sheriff Otteson of Freeborn county is holding for the owner, hoping he will call, a seven passenger car that stalled two miles southeast of Albert Lea on the Jefferson highway. At that time, it is alleged, the car carried a large cargo of alcohol bound for Mason City, Iowa.

Austin—While every family in among its possessions, a recent cen- Mower county does not include a car suses disclosed that there were 3,922 automobiles in the county on Jan. 1. Since that time dealers estimate that more than 750 automobiles have been sold in the county, bringing the total to 4,970. The population statistics of the last census gave Mower county a population of 25,933.

Red Wing—While a hot contest is expected in the city primaries on the candidate favoring and opposing the preliminary talk is largely centering on school board matters. The alleged friction between Superintendent Herr and Prinicpal Christopherson, which led to the resignation of both at the last board meetings, is being injected into election discussions.

Crookston—The city council, in a special session called for the purpose of considering a special election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mayor Charles P. Booth, agreed that a special election at this time would be unwise, as it would cause an expense of about $4000. The president of the council, under the charter, acts as mayor during any vacancy and his acts as such are as legal and binding as those of a duly elected mayor.

Albert Lea—County Agent Ben Rieke says the Freeborn County Pioneer Testing association is now the largest organization of its kind in the United States, and plans are under way to make it still larger. The move on the part of the dairymen to enlarge the association and make it county-wide, taking in every one who wants to test, is different from any other in the northwest, according to Mr. Rieke.

Stephens—Mrs. E. E. Gear, through her attorneys, has filed notice of acceptance of a reduction of $4,000 in the $12,500 verdict which she won in district court in her personal injury suit against the village of Stephens and the Minnesota Electric Distributing company. The distributing company, however, on the refusal of Judge Watts to grant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, has moved to carry the case to the supreme court.

Red Wing—A man who gave his name as Richard Jackson and his address as Rondo street, St. Paul, was fatally injured here when he was crushed beneath a freight car. Jackson was said by police to have tried to "flip" a freight car, when he slipped under the wheels. Although both his legs were severed, one of his hips crushed and his hands mangled, Jackson lived tow hours after the accident and was able to converse with physicians.

St. Cloud—A delegation of business men from St. Cloud, appeared before Federal Judge Evan A. Evens to ask a stay of mandate ordering Samuel C. Pandolfo, former head of the Pan Motor company, to jail. The men, headed by Dr. Charles N. Beyhan, asked that the mandate be stayed at least one year so that Pandolfo might reorganize the Pan Motor company and put the buisness on a paying basis. Judge Evans told them that it was impossible to stay the mandate and he did not believe the case was within his jurisdiction. Pandolfo was sentenced by former Federal Judge K. M. Landis to 10 years imprisonment on a charge of using the mails in a scheme to defraud.

Barnesville—Discouraged at the low price of potatoes, wheat, oats and barley many farmers are turning to flax as the most profitable crop raised in this locality. Thousands of acres of virgin prairie south of this city will be broken up and seeded to flax this spring.

Winona—The Winona shops of the Cihcago & North Western railway have been presented with a banner emblematic of the best accident prevention record in the last year of all the shops on the system. The number of accidents at the Winona shops was reduced 33 per cent last year.

Olivia—Floyd G. Hathaway of Grafton, N. D., has been elected county agent, succeeding W. K. Dyer, who resigned to take a position with the joint stock loan bank.

Two Harbors—M. H. Brickley, telephone manager of the Duluth & Iron Range railroad here, was elected mayor of Two Harbors at a quiet election. He was opposed by Inez M. Gardner.

Ely—Steel for an 80 foot fire lookout tower is being hauled to Fernburg hill, a high point 18 miles east of Ely, under the supervision of Ranger Frank Carney of the Superior national forest staff.

Owatonna—Steele county bankers are planning to send a big delegation to Rochester Monday and Tuesday, May 14 and 15, to attend the annual meeting of the First District group, Minnesota State Bankers' association. Plans for the district activities at the state convention in June are to be made at the meeting.

Hibbing—Local florists and agricultural departments of the local schools are planning tree planting week to be held in the village early in May. Every effective agency in the community will work in helping to plant trees. The American Legion, forestry department, park board of schools will be asked to assist.

Thief River Falls—A special meeting of the sugar beet committee was held in the local commercial club rooms. All contracts and applications for sugar beet acreage were examined and most of them approved. There are approximately eight hundred signed up in the vicinity of Thief River Falls.

St. James—The board of county commissioners will defray one-third of the expense of lowerng the Madeda-La Salle road at the intersection with the Omaha railway east of Madeda for an overhead crossing offered by the railroad and warehouse commission. Madeda village and Madeda township will each pay one-third of the expense of lowering the road.

Two Harbors—At the village election, M. B. Brickley was elected mayor; W. J. Tranah, treasurer; Edward Kronman, alderman at large; Dennis Dawn, municipal judge; George Spurbeck, special judge; C. E. Anderson, alderman, first ward; G. S. Locker, alderman, second ward; Oscar Beckman, alderman, third ward; Gust Nelson, alderman, fourth ward, and A. G. Johnson, assessor.

Minneapolis—New plans to serve the Ford manufacturing plant at the high dam, offered as a substitute for the Milwaukee railroad trackage program would upset a $4,000,000 expansion plan outlined by Milwaukee road officials, which call for building a direct connecting line between the district south of Lake street in Minneapolis and the Ford plant, and the erection of a new Mississippi river railroad bridge, J. H. Foster, general superintendent of the northern division of that railroad said.

St. Cloud—Word received here gives little hope that the date of the state high school declamation contest will be changed so that it will not conflict with the state basketball tournament. The State Declamation league last week announced the finals would be conducted in Minneapolis, March 29, which is the last day of the basketball tournament. Donald Barr, Tech student, who will represent the school at both events will be up against a knotty problem, if the Tech basketeers survive the elimination contests.

Owatonna—Dr. V. H. J. Lerrigo, former secretary of the American Baptist Foreign mission society, addressed the meeting of the Southcentral Minnesota Baptists district missionary rally on the subject, "World Tasks of Northern Baptists." His speech closed the rally at the Baptist church. The meeting was attended by 200 from this city, Mankato, Albert Lea, Blooming Prairie and Clinton Falls. Rev. Lerrigo advocated a great religious drive in Russia.

Hamel—Smashing open three doors, instead of one, so that they could carry out their bulky loot more rapidly, automobile bandits raided the Hamel service garage, and escaped with accessories, tire tubes, and casings, valued at more than $500. Hamel is 16 miles west of Minneapolis on the Rockford road. Deputy sheriffs were notified of the robbery shortly after Clarence Hays, proprietor, went to his place of business for the day. They organized a gun squad and began a search for the bandits.

Northfield—Fifty Oles have answered Captain "Ponzi" Putzier's first call for baseball candidates to practice in the St. Olaf gymnasium. Indoor practice is scheduled daily until warm weather appears. The new men will be divided into groups with an assistant coach in charge of each. Most of the freshmen trying out have had experience on town and high school teams, and much of the material is promising. Among the upper classmen there are no available pitchers, unless "Cully" Swanson should decide to try out for the job. Seven lettermen reported including Putzier, who will play second and Swanson, last year's shortstop.

Moorhead—The chapel choir of the Moorhead State Teachers college left for their annual tour, a five day trip. They will visit Detroit, Deerwood, Brainerd, Wadena and Hawley. A home concert will be given about 10 days after their return.

Worthington—In order to protect the road which has been newly graveled, warning has been issued that trucks or passenger cars weighing over 1½ tons are prohibited from using Trunk Highway No. 9 between this city and Jackson and Trunk Highway No. 6 between Hardwick and Pipestone.

MANY people deny themselves the comfort of a hot drink with meals, because they find coffee and tea detrimental to health. For many, the drug element in coffee and tea irritates the nerves, retards digestion and often prevents natural, restful sleep.

If this fits your case, try Postum. This pure cereal beverage supplies all the pleasure and satisfaction that a hot mealtime drink can give—invigorating warmth, fine aroma and delicious flavor. And you can enjoy it in the full assurance that it cannot harm health.

Creat Northern Says Shipper Pays The Bill If Laws Increase Railroad Costs

Prices of nearly all necessaries of life are too high. The average freight rate for the whole country, which is the lowest in the world, is now 46 per cent higher than the average rate during the ten year period beginning with 1900. In November, 1922, the average increase of the wholesale price of all commodities, as compared with the same period was 79 per cent. Railroad rates can be reduced in only one way— by reducing the cost of hauling freight and passengers. When a law maker says he wants lower freight rates and then proposes laws that will make it cost more to haul freight, that man is not sincere or he has not thought out the question fully. The railroads have only one source of revenue, viz., from freight and passenger earnings. If their expenses are increased they must have more income to meet the larger expenses, and they can get this income only by charging higher rates.

Some people are for Government operation of the railroads. Twenty-six months of it in this country proved it is expensive and does not give good service. Other countries have had the same experience; Italy owns its railroads, but it costs so much to operate them that great efforts are being made to turn them over to private operation. The shipper will suffer again if Government operation returns in the U. S. Only two classes are openly and frankly for it-- politicians who use it for campaign talk, and labor leaders who believe it will make more jobs. Both of these favor it to further their own ends. The lawmaker cannot add to the expenses of the railroad by forcing it to make unnecessary expenditures without hurting the shipper who has to pay the bill in the end. Low rates and good service both are needed; poor bankrupt railroads cannot give either one. How the shipper is served by this type of politician is illustrated by the fable of

The Farmer and the New Hired Man

A Farmer had an Old Horse that for many years had hauled his farm products to market, and being well fed had strength to haul a big load every day. Finally there came hard times for the Farmer. He had good crops, but the prices he received for his crops had not gone up so much as the prices he had to pay for his clothes, shoes, fuel, groceries, and hired help. He did not know what to do. A Friend told him his troubles were because his horse ate so much of his grain and hay. The Old Horse in fact did not eat any more than was necessary to keep him well and strong, but the Farmer turned him over to a New Hired Man who had Radical Theories about the treatment of horses. He beat the Old Horse almost to death, hung heavy weights on his harness, set the dogs on him, offered him food and took it away before he could eat it. Then, to make the Old Horse easier to handle, the New Hired Man hobbled him so he could hardly move and beat him more than ever because he did not go faster. When the New Hired Man told the Farmer what he was doing, he was full of Glee at the Great Joke on the Old horse. At last when the Old horse had been made weak and lame the hired Man said to the Farmer: "Your Old Horse is so sick and broken down he will never be able to haul your stuff unless you get Uncle Sam to take him and hire some more men to help doctor him up and drive him." The Farmer remembered that once when Uncle Sam had managed the Old Horse it cost a Great Deal more than ever before to do his hauling, so he decided to change Hired Men and see that the Old Horse had decent treatment, but he was Up Against It to get his hauling done while his Old Horse was gettig strong again.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Four Hundred Eighty-five ($485.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. E. Flynn and Helen Flynn, his wife, Mortgagors, to Charles Schwartz, Mortgagee, bearing date the 1st day of March, 1922, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of March, 1922, at eight o'clock A. M., in Book 108 of Mortgages, on page 302.

And Whereas, The said Charles Schwartz, the Mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Ten Thousand One Hundred Eighty-five ($10,185.00) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent per annum from the first day of March, 1922, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast Quarter (NE¼) of Section numbered Fourteen (14) in Township numbered One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range numbered Forty-three (43) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof, less one acre heretofore deeded for schoolhouse purposes, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the fifth day of May, 1923, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Ten Thousand, One Hundred Eighty-five ($10,185.00) Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed and delivered by Caroline Runge, a widow, Mortgagor, to Farmers State Bank of Mavie, Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of December 1921, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of December, 1921, at 10 o'clock A. M., in Book 108 of Mortgages on page 186, and

Whereas, the said Farmers State Bank of Mavie, Mortgagee, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and whereas there is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $616.00, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is Hereby Given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lots Ten (10) and Eleven (11) in Section Thirty-one (31) of Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North, Range Forty-one (41) West, and Lots Three (3), Four (4) and Five (5) and Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of Northwest Quarter (NW1-4) of Section six (6) of Township One Hundred Fifty-four (154) North, Range Forty one (41) West in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $616.00, and interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Gangenes, a single man Mortgagor, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 18th day of October 1918, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of November 1918, at 11:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages, on page 149.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company Mortgagee, to Farmers State Bank of Goodridge by written assignment dated the 30th day of January 1923, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 2nd day of February 1923, at 1 o'clock P. M., in Book 110 of Mortgages on page 110.

AND WHEREAS, The said Farmers State Bank of Goodridge the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the 5th day of February 1923, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and purusant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The South Half of the Northwest Quarter (S1-2 NW1-4) and North Half of the Southwest Quarter (N1-2 SW1-4) of Section One (1) in Township One Hundred Fifty-Four (154) North of Range (40) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 7th day of April 1923, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Two Hundred Fifty-Eight and 06-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Twenty-five and No-100 Dollars, Attorneys fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

The overwhelming number of De Laval Cream Separators in use is proved in a striking and forceful way by three recent investigations conducted by disinterested people, covering most of the principal butter-producing states:
(1) From an investigation conducted by the Purdue Agriculturist (Indiana), Iowa Agriculturist, Cornell Countryman (New York), Agricultural Student (Ohio), Penn State Farmer, Tennessee Farmer, published by the students of the various agricultural colleges in question, and their readers, who received the questionnaire, are either graduates or former students:
64.8% use cream separators of the following makes:
50.6%—De Laval.
16.8%—Nearest competitor.
(2) Sixty-two per cent of the cream separators on 388 representative Minnesota dairy farms, selected at random and over a wide area, are De Lavals, according to a survey recently made by The Farmer, of St. Paul.
De Laval—62%.
Nearest competitor—6.4%.
(3) From the Dairy Farm Survey of Hoard's Dairyman (the foremost dairy paper in the world, having a circulation of approximately 85,000 at the time of this investigation).
Have you a cream separator?
80.00%—Yes.
What make?
41.18%—De Laval.
16.74%—Nearest competitor.
51.26%—average number of De Lavals, based on the foregoing, which confirms the well-known statement that there are about as many De Lavals in use as all the rest combined.
The only reason there are so many more De Lavals in use is that it is the best separator—skims cleaner, lasts longer, and is easier to clean and turn.

He made a careful search of the vault. The boxes lined the walls to a height of six feet on all sides. A few cigarette stubs on the dirt floor showed that some one had been smoking, but there was nothing to indicate whom he might have been. As he finished his examination, Bartley said, "I guess we may as well go now."

I had taken off my hat when I entered the vault, and placed it on one of the boxes, and now when I looked for it I could not find it. It occurred to me that it must have fallen behind a box; and, taking Bartley's torch, I climbed upon the box and flashed the light into the niche behind the one on which I thought I had laid it. There it lay. As I reached for it my hand came in contact with something hard. I knew, even as my fingers groped for the object, that it was a revolver. Climbing down from the box, I went up to Bartley.

"Look what I found!" I exclaimed.

"Where did you get that?" he asked excitedly as he took it from me.

I told him of my hat falling behind the boxes, and how the revolver had been in the niche back of them. There seemed no reason for his being so excited over the find, but his next words enlightened me.

"That's the gun that was in Slyke's hand this morning. I recognize the worn place on the barrel."

"But how did it get there?" I asked in wonder.

"I don't know," was the reply. "It looks as if the person that threw it back of the boxes, did it to hide it. He may intend to come for it later."

To my surprise, he bent over suddenly and blew out the lantern. In a second the vault was in darkness. Currie started to remonstrate, but a warning whisper from Bartley stopped him.

"Both of you get back of that door at once. There is someone outside. Don't make a move or a sound. I think he is going to come in."

I heard Currie mutter in surprise as we groped our way behind the door. At first I could hear nothing; then on the other side of the wooden door I heard some one stumble and a hand fumble for the lock. What could it mean? If the truck had come back for another load we were in a bad fix indeed. The men who had fired at us before would not hesitate to shoot to kill this time, and when we were missing no one would think to search for us in this vault. In a fight, the odds were heavily against us, as Bartley alone was armed.

Currie and myself had been placed by Bartley so that when the door opened we would be hidden by it. He took up his position on the other side, crouching flat against the wall. It was too dark to make out his figure, or even that of Currie at my side. I listened to his uneasy breathing, and for a second wondered what he was thinking about.

Whoever was opening the door had no fear of making a noise. He stumbled into the vault and swung the door behind him with a little click. Then a slit of light pierced the darkness and we crouched against the wall, scarcely daring to breathe, expecting every moment that he would see us. Just what he had come for I never knew. He played the light rather aimlessly along the walls, then turned in onto the floor. All at once it paused, and I heard an astonished gasp. No wonder, for the light was resting on Bartley's shoes.

The next second he had extinguished it and was making for the door. Almost before he had moved, Bartley had flashed on his own torch and was saying, "Put up your hands. I have you covered."

The light in Bartley's hand had been focused on the man's body, leaving his face in darkness. As he began to move it upward to his face, the man made a swift, flying dive at Bartley's legs. The attack was so sudden that he was taken unawares, and they fell to the floor together. As Bartley went down, he struck the button of his torch and extinguished it, leaving us in darkness. We could hear the two men thrashing about on the floor, but could not tell who was getting the best of it. Then I remembered the lantern and searched for that. Relighting it, I held it above my head so that the light fell on the floor. Bartley was sitting on the man that had attacked him, his face and white suit streaked with dirt and a lump reddening over one eye, but he was smiling. He directed me to find his torch, which had rolled half under a box, and relight it. When I had complied, he rose to his feet, and, pulling the man up with him, told me to throw the light on the face of his prisoner.

"Let's have a look at this chap."

We saw a black, scowling face, and cruel, shifty eyes that blinked angrily.

Currie cried, "Why, it's Slyke's chauffeur!"

The man did not deny it, but stood silent and glowering. Remembering what Bartley had told me of the butler having seen him on the stairs while we were in the tower rooms, I wondered if he were the one who had placed the revolver here. When Bartley questioned him as to why he had come to the vault he replied that it was none of his business; and when Bartley suggested that the police might make it their business, he only laughed sneeringly. We were discussing what we should do with him, since there was no charge on which he could be arrested, when we received another shock.

The chauffeur had closed the door of the vault when he entered, but in some way it had become unfastened during the struggle, and now stood wide open, the lighted interior plainly visible to anyone without. We were standing grouped together near the center of the room, our backs to the door, when a voice said, "Up with your hands, the whole four of you. Be quick about it! I have you all covered, and will shoot the first one that moves."

There was but one thing to do, and we all did it. With our hands high in the air, we turned to the doorway to see who the intruder was. He was a tall, heavy-set man, with a round face, holding a revolver in his right hand.

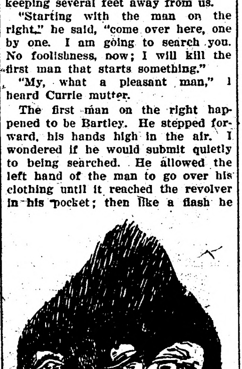
Who could this second man be? For a second I thought it must be some friend of the chauffeur; but one look at his astonished face told me he knew no more who the man was than we did. Bartley looked puzzled, yet a little smile never left his face.

The man stood still for a moment before advancing into the vault. It seemed to me that he was startled at finding four of us there. He came to the center of the vault, and stopped, keeping several feet away from us.

"Starting with the man on the right," he said, "come over here, one by one. I am going to search you. No foolishness, now; I will kill the first man that starts something."

"My, what a pleasant man," I heard Currie mutter.

The first man on the right happened to be Bartley. He stepped forward, his hands high in the air. I wondered if he would submit quietly to being searched. He allowed the left hand of the man to go over his clothing until it reached the revolver in his pocket; then like a flash he grasped the hand holding the gun at his chest, and gave it such a quick jerk that the weapon fell to the floor.



His Face Turned White With Rage, and He Cried, "You Lie!"

The fight was on. Both Currie and myself started to assist him, but Bartley called to us to watch the chauffeur. I picked up the revolver and covered the man.

It was not a long fight, and Bartley soon had his antagonist subdued. As he dragged him to his feet, and began to search him, he stopped with an amused cry. On the man's vest was a little badge.

"Why didn't you tell us you were a detective?" he asked.

The man, his face red with rage, answered, "Why in h—l should I?"

Bartley explained who he was, and the detective was delighted at the encounter. After we had given him back his gun and helped him brush himself off, he seated himself on a box, saying, "I will say you work quick, Mr. Bartley."

We grinned at this. We were much relieved to find that he was a detective, and not one of the gang engaged in running whisky. He told us that he was in the revenue department and had been watching Slyke's house for some time, or I should have said, rather, his chauffeur's. He had given him the slip and he had been searching for him already. He had encountered him about ten o'clock and had been trailing him ever since. When the chauffeur had come to the vault, he had waited for him outside; then the door had swung open and he had seen a chance to capture what he thought was the gang.

He pointed at the chauffeur and said, "That's the chap, I believe, that killed Slyke."

Up to this time the chauffeur had not said a word. His face turned white with rage, and he cried, "You lie!" and would have taken the detective by the throat if Bartley had not prevented him.

Bartley and the detective, whose name was Black, decided that the best thing to do with the chauffeur was to place him in the hands of the police. When Black learned that the vault was filled with whisky, he asked Bartley to remain and help him guard it until the police could relieve him; he seemed to fear that the rest of the gang would return. Bartley told me to go to the house and call up Roche, and ask him to come at once with his men, and then to bring back his car.

I reached the main road without meeting anyone, and, breaking into a run, was soon at the house. I telephoned at once to Roche; and he was so much startled at my story that I had great difficulty in making him understand where he was to go, and what he was to do. At last he agreed to come at once.

It took me only a few moments in Bartley's car to reach the woods again; but, when I arrrived, I saw two other cars already parked on the roadside, and knew that the police had preceded me.

I found Roche and two of his men in the vault, conferring with Bartley and Black. It had been decided to guard the place until morning, when the whisky could be removed. The chauffeur was to be taken to the Saratoga jail and locked up.

When we reached the house, Mrs. Currie came to meet us. At the sight of her husband's black eye, which by this time was very noticeable, and the ruin of Bartley's white suit, she gave a little cry.

"What under heaven have you been doing?" she asked.

Currie gave me a wink. "Looking for whisky," he answered.

He went to a nearby table, took something from each pocket and placed them carefully upon it. He then stood looking down at them proudly.

"A little souvenir of the night's work," he remarked, pointing to two bottles of whisky which he had taken, without our knowing it, from the box that Bartley had opened in the vault.

CHAPTER VII

In Which Bartley Talks of Many Things.

Mrs. Currie wanted to hear the story of our adventures; and when Bartley recounted what had taken place, I noticed that he expressed no opinion as to what was back of it all.

It was after one when we reached our rooms, and I expected that Bartley would want to go to bed at once. I knew how tired I was, and supposed that he must be even more weary. But, after he had gotten into his pajamas, he dropped into a chair by the window, curled one leg over the arm, lighted his pipe, and turned to me.

"Well, what do you think of it all?" he drawled.

That was a hard question to answer. We had been through so much, so many apparently unconnected events, that I scarcely knew what to think. Then, too, I knew very little of what had taken place after I had left him at Slyke's, or what new things he had observed there. The finding of whisky and the sudden appearance of the chauffeur, coupled with my discovery of the revolver, seemed to me to still further complicate the problem. What had he come to the vault for? I remembered that the detective had said he thought the chauffeur had killed Slyke. I wondered if this was simply a wild guess, or whether there was something behind it.

Bartley watched me with that little smile on his lips that meant so many things. "Well, Pelt," he said, "it looks as if we were engaged upon as mysterious a case as ever came our way. The more I look it over, the less sure I am of anything. Do you know, I picked up very little after you left the house?"

I had been wondering all day if he would find any clues of value. I knew what a careful search he must have made, and his statement that he picked up very little of importance surprised me.

Bartley watched me for a moment or two before continuing. Then he told me of his day's work. They had been unable to find the chauffeur either at the garage or anywhere else around the estate. No one had seen him since the butler saw him on the stairs early in the morning. The cook had later volunteered the information that Mr. Slyke and he had quarreled over something. What it was she did not know; she had only heard the few words he had repeated to me. The house had been searched from top to bottom, but without result. So far as he could tell, nothing had been stolen.

Bartley had learned also that there was ill feeling between Miss Potter and the chauffeur, and he had questioned her about it. She refused to say what it was, and seemed to consider Bartley's presence as an intrusion. He had secured nothing new from her. When asked if she knew whether Slyke had any enemies who might want to take his life, she replied she did not. Repeated questioning could not shake her story that the step-daughter Ruth had not been expected home that night, and that she had not known the girl was in the house until we had all heard her voice on the stairs. As the girl carried her own key, she could easily, she said, have returned without her knowing it.

Then there was the dog to be considered. He had slept as usual in the big living room on the night of the crime. The girl's story of his walking to the foot of the stairs with her when she came in, proved that he was there the entire night. Bartley remarked that it was very strange that the dog should have made no sound.

WHEN NOBILITY BREWED BEER

English "Upper Classes" Proved Not to Have Been Dependent on Commercial Product.

Relics of "ye olden days" show that beer was brewed on their own estates by the nobility in very ancient days. On the site at present occupied by Hay Hill once stood a farmhouse belonging to the Berkley estate, which comprised the land upon which Devonshire house stands. Recent clearing away of debris in the fine old gardens has brought to light the old vaults belonging to the original farmhouse, which dated back from the late Tudor period. When Berkley street was cut through in 1600 the old farmhouse was pulled down, but only to the street level, so that the original vaults have been found preserved below the street. The brewing house has been cleared of debris. Brickwork believed to go back beyond 1600 has been found, and it is believed that the two mash tubs bearing the lettering "D.D.," now on view in the vaults of Devonshire house, were brought from the original brewery.—London Mail.

SCORE ONE FOR PERFORMER

Small Boy Must Have Retired From That Particular Encounter in Some Confusion.

At a point during the course of an address before members of the Caravan club the other day, Representative William D. Upshaw of Georgia had occasion to be "reminded" of a certain vaudeville performer whose imitation of dogs comprised the chief feature of his act.

"On his way to the theater in the small town where he was appearing," said the congressman, "the actor was accosted by a youth who wanted to know if 'he wasn't the man down to the Palace theater who barked like a dog.'

"'Yes,' replied the imitator, rather complimented on being recognized.

"'Gee,' laughed the boy, 'I got ya beat when it comes to makin' noises like a dog.'

"'That may be true,' snapped back the performer, 'but, then, you must remember I had to learn it.'"—Exchange.

If you don't feel superior you will not offend by acting superior.

What to Eat and Why
A Natural Supply of Vitamin

The word "Vitamin" is new, but the thing itself is as old as the human race. It is the energizing, vitalizing, growth-producing element in the right food. Its absence is a serious fault of the wrong food. When the food is right, there is no need to go to the drug store for Vitamin.

Grape-Nuts, the famous ready-to-eat cereal, supplies the natural Vitamin from the wheat, and a further supply is included in the cream or milk with which Grape-Nuts is eaten.

Grape-Nuts is delightfully crisp and appetizing, with a flavor which happily suggests the wholesome, health-building goodness which the food contains. Phosphorus and iron, as well as Vitamin, with a bran content to stimulate intestinal action, are supplied by Grape-Nuts. Many of our modern, "refined" foods lack these vitally necessary elements.

Grape-Nuts digests easily and is assimilated quickly, and is splendidly nourishing and energizing. You'll find better health and fitness, in the natural way, with Grape-Nuts as a regular part of your diet.

There's genuine economy in Grape-Nuts—many servings of this exceptionally nourishing food to the package. At your grocer's—ready to serve. Grape-Nuts—the Body Builder. "There's a Reason." Made by Postum Cereal Co., Inc., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Mothers Advise Their Daughters to Rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Keep Them in Health

A Mother's Advice Prevents Operation

Corona, N. Y.—"I had a terrible pain in my left side and had to go to bed every so often. Doctors had told me I must be operated on, but I do not believe in the knife and would rather suffer than go through it. My mother also did not believe in it and she made me take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because it had helped her. It has also helped me for I am better and able to do all my work. I recommend your medicine and give you permission to use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. J. Busch, Jr., 11 S. Railroad Avenue, Corona, N. Y.

A Sickly Child

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly praise your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. George E. Whitacre, 621 W. Madison Ave., Mahoningtown, Pa.

Every girl wants to be healthy and strong, and every mother wants her daughter to do well in school and to enjoy herself at all times.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for young girls just entering womanhood. Mothers may depend upon it. Remember it is prepared from roots and herbs, contains nothing that can injure, and tends to tone up and strengthen the organs concerned, so that they will work in a healthy and normal manner.

For nearly fifty years it has been used by women of all ages, and these women know its great value.

Let it help your daughter and yourself.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Duluth—The population of Duluth July 1, last, was 106,269, according to an estimate by the United States bureau of census.

Virginia—More than 50 naval reservists from the newly organized Virginia unit plan to attend the summer cruises of the ship Paducah.

Willmar—Erection of a new 12 room schoolhouse is being considered here. Options on a block of ground near the present school building has been obtained by the board of education.

Ortonville—Rev. Melvin O. Andrews of Wheaton, has accepted a call to Our Saviour's Lutheran church of Benson, succeeding Congressman-elect O. J. Kvale.

Maynard—A hen's egg measuring 8½ by 7 inches was exhibited here by Ole Glevre, who said it was laid by one of his Leghorns. When broken, it was found to contain an ordinary white and yolk and also a small perfect egg with a hard shell.

Tracy—The heavy movement of hogs from this section of the state shows a great transformation on the farms in the last few years. Since Jan. 1 two Tracy firms have shipped 10,169 hogs to market, for which they have received a total of $171,998.

Willmar—The alumni of the University of Minnesota residing in Kandiyohi county at their banquet here organized a unit which will have a membership of 150 alumni and former students. E. B. Pierce, general secretary of the alumni association and former registrar at the university, addressed the gathering.

Austin—Whether a junior college will be in operation when the next fall term of school opens in Austin will be decided at a meeting of the board of education. Further information is being obtained so that the board may have more data before it.

Duluth—Methods of procedure occupied the first day of the hearing before District Judge W. A. Cant, on the petition of mining companies asking that the "north 40" of the village of Hibbing be vacated. The hearing will be resumed when introduction of evidence is expected to begin.

Fairmont—Fairmont's new $12,000 fire truck got its first country run when the department was called to put out a fire on the W. I. Boyce farm, northeast of town. The truck, with 18 men aboard, made the run of 3½ miles in 15 minutes. The flames were extinguished by emptying the 40 gallon tank of chemical into a burning cornscrib.

International Falls—At a meeting here addressed by Miss Marjorie Edgar, regional director of Minnesota Girl Scouts, Miss Loretta O'Connor was selected to represent the Girl Scouts of this city at the fourth annual convention in Washington April 17 to 25.

Moorhead—Concordia college of this city entered upon a new program of expansion when the board of trustees closed a deal for the purchase of 65 acres of land, two blocks from the present campus, which is to become the future campus of the school. The athletic field will be located on the new site at once, trees will be planted and all buildings to be erected in the future will be located there.

Windom—Windom's water and light plant will have cheap fuel for the next few months as the result of the wrecking of a coal train in the Omaha railway yards here. Breaking of a bar on one of the cars sent 11 cars into the ditch and tore up 500 feet of the main line track. While the wrecking crews were pulling the cars from the ditch the city authorities negotiated with the railroad officials for the purchase of the coal. A total of 516 tons were bought at $4.48 a ton.

Veteransville—Plans are under consideration to provide the disabled veterans at Veteransville and Silver Star with a permanently established government physician. Five veterans with their families have just arrived from South Dakota. Fifteen more are expected any day from Wisconsin. A number of others from Missouri and Iowa are planning to make these settelements their future home.

Crookston—As a result of the meeting of the Red River Valley Development association, heads of a number of the city's leading concerns took action to put Crookston definitely in line with the movement launched to strengthen the Development association throughout the valley. Strengthening of the association's resources and membership, it is claimed, will make possible more effective work for the valley in the matter of freight rates transportation service, and the upbuilding of the reputation of the valley's products, grain and potatoes in particular.

Walker—Endeavoring to obtain "a fair and reasonable" settlement for the timber lands owned by Chippewa Indians on the Minnesota national forest which, according to an appraisal made by a special committee to the secretary of the interior, Jan. 16 last, are worth $1,490,195.50, E. L. Rogers, as legal representative of the Indians, has addressed an appeal to President Harding urging that the government disregard the report and arrange a new appraisal for the timber and lands which he estimates to be worth "not less than $4,000,000." Rogers is county attorney for Cass county.

Hibbing—Horace Austin, found guilty by a jury in court here of conducting a liquor nuisance, was sentenced by Judge Martin Hughes to serve 90 days in the county work farm and to pay a fine of $300.

Kenyon—E. G. Quamme, president of the Federal Land bank, St. Paul, addressed the second day's sessions of the Farmers institute here. The motive of the institute is to create cooperation and improve farming. Mr Quamme's subject was "Rural Credits."

Winona—The La Crosse Garment company, manufacturers of women's dresses and aprons, will open a branch factory here. A five story building here has been leased and 100 persons, mostly women, will be employed in 30 days.

St. Peter—Gustavus Adolphus college affirmative debating team closed the debating season with victory over South Dakota university of Vermillion. One judge, I. M. Cochran of Carleton college, officiated.

Montevideo—John M. Thompson was elected president of the Montevideo Commercial club at the annual meeting of the directors. John C. Haave was re-elected secretary and W. A. Stand, treasurer.

St. Cloud—Lois Dueber and Eldora Johnson will be valedictorian and salutatorian of St. Cloud Technical high school in June, it was announced. There are 120 seniors who will graduate.

Owatonna—The rally of South Central Baptist churches of Minnesota here closed after ways and means of raising the association's quota of the $10,000,000 church fund were discussed.

Owatonna—J. H. A. Brahtz, St. Paul consulting engineer, has been selected by the city council to design a new $500,000 reservoir for the municipal water system.

St. James—The city council in a special session rescinded its resolution to permit the people of St. James to vote at the election on the question of leasing a building lot to the American Legion. The reason given was that the request for the lot did not have the proper backing by the Legion.

St. Cloud—A resolution urging the state legislature to pass the pending bill which will legalize the socalled Babcock road bond issue of $20,000,000 was framed and passed by the Stearns county commissioners here. The vote was unanimous.

Waseca—Judge Converse, justice of the Dakota county district court, will preside at sessions of the Waseca county district court. He will exchange benches with Judge Fred W. Senn in the hearing of cases in which Judge Senn was acting as an attorney before his election to the office.

Owatonna—The Steele county commissioners have taken action favoring the employment of a county public health nurse. The commissioners also have provided for expensive improvements to township roads within the county by donating $1,000 to each township which will set aside a like fund.

Worthington—The Union Congregational church of this city, the oldest religious society in Worthington, is making plans to fittingly celebrate its 50th anniversary May 18. Dr. George A. Moore, who has served the church as clerk ever since it was organized, and his wife, who also was a charter member of the church, will be honored guests at the celebration.

Hutchinson—The Biscay Cow Testing association, composed of dairymen in the Biscay and Hutchinson communities, boasts the champion butterfat producing cow for the month of February of any association in the state. The cow in question is a grade Holstein and her monthly production was 97.80 pounds of butterfat from milk testing 5 per cent. She is owned by Arthur Wangerin.

Albert Lea—"Dick" Mills, leader of a band that was famous in Minnesota 40 years ago, celebrated his 89th birthday anniversary at his home here. It was a surprise party staged by the only other surviving members of the band, Charles Brundin, Dell Fuller, Frank Barlow and A. G. Brundin. The band was organized in 1879, and became famous throughout northern Iowa and southern Minnesota.

Waseca—It is expected that the spring, summer and fall of 1923 will see buildings, including both business blocks and new homes, costing more than $700,000. The improvements will provide Waseca with its biggest construction here in its history. Among the principal projects are the construction of a new high school to cost approximately $400,000 and the new Sacred Heart high school, which will cost between $75,000 and $100,000.

St. Cloud—One hundred seventy-five claims against the estate of A. G. Whitney, who died a year ago, were allowed in probate court here without objection, before Judge J. B. Himal. The amount the allowed claims totals will not be known for several days, court officials said. In all there were $1,200,000 in 320 claims filed against the state of Mr. Whitney, who was head of the Public Service company of St. Cloud.

Owatonna—A J. Bosbart, city assessor of Owatonna, has resigned and E. H. Lippert has been elected to succeed him. J. H. Brahtz of St. Paul was named consulting engineer for the erection of a new 1,000,000 gallon capacity steel stand pipe. The pipe will cost between $30,000 and $40,000.

Duluth—That an order providing for the vacation of the north 40 of the village of Hibbing would mean sacrificing public interests for private benefit is the contention of the village of Hibbing contained in an answer to the petition of mining companies asking that the plot be vacated.

Great Northern Says Shipper Pays The Bill If Laws Increase Railroad Costs

Prices of nearly all necessaries of life are too high. The average freight rate for the whole country, which is the lowest in the world, is now 46 per cent higher than the average rate during the ten year period beginning with 1900. In November, 1922, the average increase of the wholesale price of all commodities, as compared with the same period was 79 per cent. Railroad rates can be reduced in only one way — by reducing the cost of hauling freight and passengers. When a law maker says he wants lower freight rates and then proposes laws that will make it cost more to haul freight, that man is not sincere or he has not thought out the question fully. The railroads have only one source of revenue, viz, from freight and passenger earnings. If their expenses are increased they must have more income to meet the larger expenses, and they can get this income only by charging higher rates.

Some people are for Government operation of the railroads. Twenty-six months of it in this country proved it is expensive and does not give good service. Other countries have had the same experience; Italy owns its railroads, but it costs so much to operate them that great efforts are being made to turn them over to private operation. The shipper will suffer again if Government operation returns in the U. S. Only two classes are openly and frankly for it-- politicians who use it for campaign talk, and labor leaders who believe it will make more jobs. Both of these favor it to further their own ends. The lawmaker cannot add to the expenses of the railroad by forcing it to make unnecessary expenditures without hurting the shipper who has to pay the bill in the end. Low rates and good service both are needed; poor bankrupt railroads cannot give either one. How the shipper is served by this type of politician is illustrated by the fable of

A Farmer had an Old Horse that for many years had hauled his farm products to market, and being well fed had strength to haul a big load every day. Finally there came hard times for the Farmer. He had good crops, but the prices he received for his crops had not gone up so much as the prices he had to pay for his clothes, shoes, fuel, groceries, and hired help. He did not know what to do. A Friend told him his troubles were because his horse ate so much of his grain and hay. The Old Horse in fact did not eat any more than was necessary to keep him well and strong, but the Farmer turned him over to a New Hired Man who had Radical Theories about the treatment of horses. He beat the Old Horse almost to death, hung heavy weights on his harness, set the dogs on him, offered him food and took it away before he could eat it. Then, to make the Old Horse easier to handle, the New Hired Man hobbled him so he could hardly move and beat him more than ever because he did not go faster. When the New Hired Man told the Farmer what he was doing, he was full of Glee at the Great Joke on the Old horse. At last when the Old horse had been made weak and lame the hired Man said to the Farmer: "Your Old Horse is so sick and broken down he will never be able to haul your stuff unless you get Uncle Sam to take him and hire some more men to help doctor him up and drive him." The Farmer remembered that once when Uncle Sam had managed the Old Horse it cost a Great Deal more than ever before to do his hauling, so he decided to change Hired Men and see that the Old Horse had decent treatment, but he was Up Against It to get his hauling done while his Old Horse was getting strong again.

Flynn and Helen Flynn, his wife, Mortgagors, to Charles Schwartz, Mortgagee, bearing date the 1st day of March, 1922, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of March, 1922, at eight o'clock A. M., in Book 108 of Mortgages, on page 502.

And Whereas, The said Charles Schwartz, the Mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Ten Thousand One Hundred Eighty-five ($10,185.00) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent per annum from the first day of March, 1923, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast Quarter (NE¼) of Section numbered Fourteen (14) in Township numbered One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range numbered Forty-three (43) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof, less one acre heretofore deeded for schoolhouse purposes, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the fifth day of May, 1923, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Ten Thousand One Hundred Eighty-five ($10,185.00) Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated March 20th, A. D. 1923.

Farmers Take Notice

The Marshall County State Bank has been investigating the possibilities of organizing an Alfalfa Association in this locality in the furthering of the raising of alfalfa. We are all aware of the value of alfalfa for a stock feed and the possibilities of several crops during the summer.

Not only does this crop hold good for feed, but it also is valuable for its seed. Norwestern Minnesota is rated by Agricultural experts as the most adaptable territory in Minnesota for the raising of Grim Alfalfa. It appears that we have the natural resources for this project.

Due to the fact that most of the land is not in condition for a large acreage of alfalfa, we are very anxious that a start is made by our good farmers and to increase from year to year.

We make this suggestion that those who are interested in seeing this movement started in this locality will so state their views to others and talk the matter over with the bank. We shall make the necessary arrangements for organizing and in getting speakers here to talk on the subject. Arrangements are being made for a speaker in the near future. Look for Announcements.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Stanislaw Kubinski and Anna Kubinski, his wife, Mortgagors, to Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, bearing date the 15th day of September, 1921, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, 1921, at 8 A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages on page 507.

And whereas, the said Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, has duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions thereof, and whereas there is due at the date of this notice upon said Mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $6,828.60, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the Mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lot Three (3), Southeast quarter (SE¼) of Northwest quarter (NW¼), and East half (E½) of Southwest quarter (SW¼) of Section Four (4), in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty (40) West, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front Door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 5th day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $6,828.60, and interest and taxes, if any, on said premises and attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

Residence Burned

The little house, south from the school grounds, owned by H. B. Young and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien was completely destroyed by fire, with all its contents on Wednesday afternoon.

The fire was probably caused by an overheated stove. Mr. Horien did not feel well and went home, built a fire, laid down and probably went to sleep. Mrs. Horien had taken the baby and gone to a neighbors for an afternoon call. Mr. Horien was wakened by the fire which had gained such headway that he could not put it out, and all the furniture he was able to save was a table and a couple of chairs. He tried to get out a dresser and cut his right hand so badly on a window glass that he had to go to Dr. Froehlich to have it dressed

A crowd quickly gathered but were powerless to stop the flames as the house was too far away from the fire station. However both the owner and occupant very much appreciate the willingness of the people to render all possible aid.

The building was covered by insurance, but Mr. Horien carried no insurance on furniture or clothing, and the family is left destitute of both.

Swan Carlson was a Thief River Falls visitor Monday.

Arno Steinhauer bot a 14x80 silo of C. H. Gunheim the first of the week.

—12—

"It looks," I commented, "as if whoever committed the crime did not pass through the living room."

Bartley gave me a disgusted look. "Or else, Pelt, the dog knew him. The only way to reach the room where Slyke slept was up those stairs, and to reach the stairs he had to pass through the living room. Remember this, too, Lawrence said that Slyke was not going to bed, but expected another visitor. The butler says the dog was in the room with him when he let Lawrence out. Suppose the other visitor came. If Slyke himself admitted him, the dog would have probably barked at least once—that is, unless he knew him."

"Then it might have been someone in the house," I suggested.

Bartley assented, and we discussed the various persons in the household. First, we both agreed that the shot the boy had heard was the one that had killed Slyke, and that the time must have been between half-past one and two o'clock. If that were so, then, when the girl came in about three o'clock, Slyke was already dead. Bartley was sure that it took at least thirty minutes to undress Slyke and get him down from the balcony to his room. If the shot that the boy heard was fired before two o'clock, then the girl would not be suspected, for she had not returned until three. We eliminated her.

Bartley Then Analyzed the Sister-in-Law.

Bartley then analyzed the sister-in-law. He said he felt sure she was hiding something, for she had not been frank in telling what she knew, and seemed anxious to get him out of the house. Whether what she was withholding concerned Slyke's death or not he could not tell; but whatever it was, he was determined to discover it.

"Do you remember, Pelt," he asked, "that Currie told us she runs a ouija board? There is nothing startling in that; thousands are doing the same thing. Since the war all forms of spiritualism have made hundreds of converts. When she met King at the door this morning, she told him that the board had spelled 'trouble' the night before."

I stared at him in astonishment. He seemed to be regarding a ouija board seriously. He saw my look and chuckled.

"Oh, I'm not interested in the ouija board itself; what I am interested in is that word 'trouble' that it spelled out for her."

This was more astonishing still, and I asked, "Why, you haven't any faith in those things, have you?"

Again he chuckled, then became serious. "Sure I have, but not in the way you think. The messages people think come from another world, come from the subconscious minds of the persons who are fooling with the board. They do not realize that they themselves are subconsciously directing its movements and spelling out their own messages. Now, that board wrote for Miss Potter, 'Trouble is coming,' not once but many times. What I want to know is this: What was the something that, deep in her mind, told her that trouble was coming? What was the cause of her fear?"

He lighted another cigar before he continued: "There is still another thing that shows she knew some danger was threatening. You remember she also told us that she had dreamed that Slyke had been killed."

I knew what he was driving at now. Freud, whose theory of psycho-analysis was well known to Bartley, had worked out the interpretations of dreams. The theory of psycho-analysis is that in our sleep the subconscious mind has full play; our repressions come to the surface and express themselves in dreams. The psycho-analyst is thus often able to explore the secret places of our minds through them and tell the cause of our trouble.

"Shakespeare was right when he said, 'We are such stuff as dreams are made of,'" Bartley added in a quizzical tone as he paused to relight his cigar. "Miss Potter dreamed more than once that Slyke had been killed. We are told a dream is a suppressed wish, and that in our dreams our wishes are often hidden by symbols. This woman probably did not wish Slyke actually dead. She had no quarrel with him as far as I know. What she did wish was entirely different. She wished that he might be away so that he would be out of some trouble, and her suppressed wish caused her to dream that he was dead. That's the reason why I believe that she knows more than she will tell."

"What can it be?" I asked.

"I don't know, but it is something that was causing a great deal of trouble to Slyke, perhaps to all of them. It might even be something that will bring dishonor. Anyway, it was so serious that, sleeping or waking, it was on her mind. I wish she would talk; we need all the light we can get."

"But that does not actually prove that she knows anything about his death," I suggested.

Bartley turned quickly and glanced at me to see if I were serious. Seeing that I was, he explained: "I don't say that it does. The ouija board performances and the dreams were before his death, not after it. Of course, the fact that the dog did not bark throws suspicion on everyone that was in the house at the time."

He was silent for a while, glancing thoughtfully out of the window, and then resumed his story.

After I left him, he had locked himself in the tower for over an hour and gone over the two rooms and the balcony almost inch by inch. The only thing that had escaped us in our first search, he said, was a small stopper, the end covered with red wax. He was not sure whether the finding of the stopper meant anything or not. His second examination had made him more positive than ever that Slyke had been murdered, and that the murderer wished his death to appear to be suicide.

It would be almost impossible to make a jury believe that it was murder on the slight evidence that we had, and I said as much to Bartley. He agreed with me, and admitted he would not be surprised if King, as coroner, brought in a verdict of suicide. I pondered on this a while; then a thought struck me.

"Suppose, after all, he did kill himself, Bartley. You base your theory of murder on the position of the bedclothes and the way the gun was held. Suppose he did kill himself, and some other person, not the murderer, came into the room and pulled the bedclothes up around his neck."

He shook his head in denial. "We would still have, Pelt," he said with a rather sarcastic smile, "the other questions to be answered. First, we would ask how the blood-stains got on the balcony of the tower. We would also want to know why the hand did not grasp the gun as tightly as it should. Then we would demand to know why there was no blood on the pillow where his head rested. It won't do. There is no doubt of it. He was killed."

I interrupted to ask if, as Miss Potter admitted, she had closed his eyes, why she might not have been also the one who pulled the bedclothes up around his neck.

Bartley replied, "It is true that she did close his eyes, but she insists she touched nothing else."

"But," I broke in, "what was her real reason for doing it?"

"She said, you remember, that the eyes frightened her. Let a nervous woman come suddenly upon a dead body and it is very possible that the eyes staring at her might so frighten her that she would close them. Her confession cleared up a point that bothered me. The accounting for the eyes being closed does not prove that he committed suicide, however. There is little enough evidence one way or another, but what there is points to murder and to nothing else."

"There is another thing," I said. "Why was the revolver taken from him while we were upstairs? It seems a very foolish thing to have done. Who did it? Was it the butler or Miss Potter?"

Both the butler and Miss Potter had been out of the tower room, Bartley reminded me, for some time before we suspected Slyke's death was murder and not suicide. As to who had taken the revolver, it was impossible to say as yet. If we believed that the butler had seen Briffeur on the stairs while we were on the balcony, then he might be the one. The finding of the gun in the vault and his appearance almost immediately afterward seemed to point to him. Whoever had done it had been very foolish.

The next matter that he spoke about did not seem to have any relation with what had preceded it. It was the robbery of the year before. He had learned from the step-daughter Ruth that she had not positively identified the men now in jail, but had thought that one of the men was similar in height and build to one of the men she had seen in the room. The room had been too dark for her to see very clearly. Nor was that all that she had told him which had disagreed with the accounts of the burglary that Rogers had given us. He had said that she had aroused Slyke and told him that burglars were downstairs; while in her story to Bartley she stated that, after she heard the noise in the living room, she went to the door of Slyke's room to call him, but found it empty. When she saw him he was standing on the lower step of the stairs leading to the living room. There had evidently been a struggle, and a gun went off just before she reached him. It was she who had called the police, and Slyke had opposed her doing so "as nothing had been taken."

"You see how it looks, Pelt," he said with a grin. "Slyke did not want the police in at all. He did not wish any action taken, either then or later. He was nearer the men than anyone else, yet he swore he could not identify them. That makes me believe that he knew who they were and did not want the matter looked into."

"Did the girl tell you who found that piece of newspaper?" I asked.

"She said it was the chauffeur who had called their attention to it. The police do not seem to have made any search that night, or in fact until noon the next day. Then, with the help of the chauffeur and the butler, they searched the living room, and the chauffeur directed their attention to a piece of paper lying on the floor, half under a rug. Of course, you see what that leads to. For hours that room had been unguarded, and any one who wished could have gone in there. Even the piece of cloth was not found for several days, strangely enough; nor did the police find the footprints under the window until three days later, although they claimed they had searched the spot before."

I broke in with, "That looks, in other words, as if—"

"As if some one wished to send those men to jail," he finished for me.

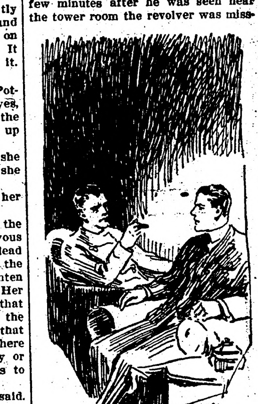
He sighed, gave a little laugh, and remarked: "There are at least three things I would like to know. First, was the robbery a plant?"

"A plant?" I asked, looking at him in wonder.

"Yes! There may have been no robbery at all."

"What do you mean by that?"

He threw out his hands. "I don't quite know myself, but let that pass. There is another thing that puzzles me, and that is the chauffeur. I can tell by the way Miss Potter acted when we mentioned his name that she does not like him. He it was who took from the library the book with the account of the English crime in it. He had words with Slyke the day before the murder, and was missing when we wanted to question him. A few minutes after he was seen near the tower room the revolver was missing. I believe he is well worth watching. And lastly, what was the motive for Slyke's murder?"



"Perhaps the Girl Killed Him."

A wild thought struck me. I knew at the time how absurd it was, yet a desire to hear what Bartley would reply made me voice it.

"Perhaps the girl killed him."

Bartley gave me a surprised look, started to speak, then decided to wait and hear what I had to say.

BOMB WRECKS LOCK OF CANAL

Ruhr Waterway Traffic Paralyzed by Sabotage Success in Placing Explosive.

MAIN CANAL IS FREE

Guards Are Placed at Ruhr Junctions —French Algerian Troops Eject German Families From Euren.

Essen.—The explosion of a time bomb destroyed the lock of the Dortmund-Ems canal near Herne. The canal was blocked, seriously interfering with the complicated inland waterway traffic in the Ruhr.

This is the most serious case of sabotage reported on the Ruhr waterways. The lock which was destroyed is near the junction of the Dortmund-Ems canal with the main canal that runs down to the Rhine at Duisburg and Ruhrort, where the largest inland water port in the world is located.

Main Canal Free.

The intention of the dynamiters apparently was not only to block the canal but to drain the water from the main Rhine-Herne canal, which is the main waterway artery of the Ruhr. The French say this main canal has not been interfered with, as the locks on both sides of the one which was dynamited were closed immediately following the explosion to prevent the draining of the main canal.

The Dortmund-Ems canal, itself an important waterway, is blocked by the destruction of the lock. Guards have been placed at all junctions and locks as a measure to prevent further damage.

The circumstances of the explosion indicated that the bomb had been placed with great care under difficult circumstances. It blew out of the gate and tore a large hole in the side of the canal.

Families Ejected.

Frankfort-on-Main — French Spahi (Algerian) troops ejected 106 families within ten minutes from their dwellings in the German railway men's colony at Euren, near Treves, according to reports from German quarters.

The Germans assert the evictions were carried out with unusual ruthlessness, the troops going about with their rifles and sabres ready for action and often striking or shoving the inhabitants in order to accelerate the evacuation of the buildings.

OIL SWINDLERS GET MONEY

Washington—Oil stock promoters operating in the State of Texas during the last five years have filched more than $100,000,000 from the public, Postmaster General New was advised by John H. Edwards, solicitor of the postoffice department, and Chief Postal Inspector Simmons, who are in Fort Worth co-operating with the department of justice in the prosecution of mail fraud cases involving oil promoters.

In making public the report, the postmaster general also declared the postoffice department intended to "move in the most vigorous and persistent manner possible for the enforcement of both the criminal law and the fraud order statutes against the fraudulent use of the mails not only in the sale of fraudulent oil stocks but all other cases involving fraud in the mails."

Mr. New said the government had been appealed to "by disillusioned stockholders to stop the oil stock frauds" after "wild cat promoters" had escaped prosecution by state authorities. Postoffice inspectors, he added, have been working since last summer on more than 200 cases, many of which have already gone to the grand jury now in session at Fort Worth.

MELLON URGES SURTAX CUT

Washington—A $70,000,000 increase in the March collections of income and profits taxes as compared with the March collections of last year, on which the higher income surtax rates applied, gives a practical answer to the tax problem and "shows clearly what course further revision should take," Secretary Mellon declared in a statement.

Forecasting in this statement possible efforts by the treasury to have congress further cut the surtax rates on incomes, Secretary Mellon asserted that the March collections of $463,000,000 had fully justified his prediction that downward revision would have the effect of increasing rather than decreasing the federal revenue. The secretary viewed the increase in collections as proof that the downward revision had acted as a stimulant to business.

Owsley Urges Alien Ban.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Commander Alvin Owsley of the American Legion, in an address here urged that a barrier be placed against the tide of foreigners now coming into this country, emphasizing the millions of people now in this land who cannot read, write, or speak English. He said that one great trouble with immigrants is that many of them come, not as pioneers to absorb the manner and customs of their adopted country and be thoroughly assimilated by it, but as profiteers and troublemakers.

STATE FACING LABOR SHORTAGE

Fields Are Almost Ready for Seeding and No Supply of Help Is Coming In.

MEN ARE NEEDED NOW

Wm. Guy, Cass Agent, Goes to Cities Looking for Men—Mrs. Bowe Declares Situation Worse Than During War.

Fargo, N. D.—With annual spring seeding operations only two or three days away, under favorable weather conditions, North Dakota faces the most acute farm labor shortage in its history.

"It is far worse than any time during the war," says Mrs. M. B. Bowe, head of the state-federal employment office in Fargo.

The Cass County Farm bureau considers the situation so critical that Wm. Guy, county agent, has been instructed to make a special trip to the twin cities to make a survey of the situation and try to secure more help there.

A conference was held in the office of Mr. Guy, attended by Henry Cross of Mapleton, president of the Cass County Farm bureau, John Plath of Davenport, Henry Suman of Hunter, and other farm bureau members.

Fields Are Dry.

"The snow is practically all gone, the fields are bare and there is very little water standing on them," says Mr. Cross. "Three days of warm breezy weather would put most of Cass county in shape for seeding and there will be a rush to the fields."

Reports from other sections of the state indicate that this is generally true of almost the entire state.

The tremendous revival of industry in the east is drawing North Dakota's normal labor supply in that direction, in the opinion of Mrs. Bowe, who gives this as the most pronounced factor in the labor shortage situation.

Woodsmen Go East.

"Usually at this time of the year the men, coming out of the northern lumber woods, are seeking employment on the farms. This year this movement is drifting eastward," says Mrs. Bowe. "The men have been coming out of the woods for three weeks, but very few of them are coming to North Dakota."

Whole State Wants Men.

"The entire state is demanding help, and with a few days of real warm weather we will face a situation more serious than we have ever witnessed before. In the past few days we have had requests for men from all over the western slope country, and from every corner of the state.

"We are getting a few men from the east, but we could use ten times as many as we are getting. I do not believe many farmers realize the situation. They have been expecting that when they got ready to begin seeding they could get men.

"I dread to think of what will happen when the big demand really begins.

Farm Help Shortage Everywhere.

"The worst of it is there does not seem to be much hope of relief. There is a shortage of farm help almost everywhere, according to reports we are receiving from the east and south."

BARE RUSS COLONY SCHEME

Returning Family Tells Story Which Causes Arrest of Promoters.

New York—Accused by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Doyle of Baton Rouge, La., of having obtained from them $1,100 by falsely representing the prospects for American colonists in Soviet Russia, P. Pascal Cosgrove and Frank Reese, operating the autonomous industrial colony Kuzbas, in New York, were locked up in police headquarters charged with grand larceny.

The district attorney ordered the arrest after the Doyles, who returned from Russia with their two small sons last Wednesday, had rolated their experiences in Siberia, where they had been sent with 125 other American colonists. The case will be taken to the grand jury.

Arriving in Petrograd last year, the Doyles told Assistant District Attorney Weller the party was met by "Big Bill" Haywood, the fugitive I. W. W. leader, and a review of 10,000 troops was held in their honor. Four bands added to the impressiveness of the greeting. When they reached the supposed co-operative industrial colony in Siberia they declared they found conditions uncivilized. The "free love" ideas of the Russians, they said, finally made them determine to quit Russia.

Mr. Weller said the Kuzbas has 40 or 50 other offices scattered over the United States.

Youth Dies in Grain Bin.

Bottineau—Joseph Bogstie, 20, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bogstie of this city, lost his life from suffocation when he fell into a large bin of rye in his father's elevator here. The young man was engaged in oiling the machinery in the top of the elevator when he fell into the bin and as a car was being loaded at the time, the suction from the emptying grain spout drew him to the bottom. The fact that he had fallen into the bin was not noticed until the spout was clogged.

MRS. M. SNYDER GAINS 20 LBS.

Declares Tanlac Overcame Rheumatism and Stomach Trouble, Restoring Full Vigor.

"Tanlac built me up twenty pounds, and I am as happy over my new health as my little boy was over his Christmas toys," declared Mrs. Mary Snyder, 838 Estes St., Charlottesville, Va.

"For two years I suffered from stomach trouble, rheumatism and a nervous, run-down condition. I was almost a skeleton and got to the point where, when I went to bed nights, I wondered if I would be able to get up in the morning. Rheumatism in my shoulders was so painful, and I was so thin and weak that I did little of anything except try to get well.

"I was in despair when I started taking Tanlac, but now my troubles are all gone and I am as healthy and happy as I could wish to be. Tanlac has earned my undying gratitude."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

The Modern Child.

"So these are your little children, Joan," said auntie, trying to enter into the spirit of her small niece's game, in which a large and mixed family of dolls played a leading part.

"You mustn't call me Joan; you must call me Mrs. Jenkins," replied the indignant parent.

"I'm sorry, dear," said auntie, humbly, "but you never told me you were married."

"Well, really, auntie!" cried Joan scornfully; "where did you think I got all my children from?"

MRS. EARLS TELLS WOMEN

How Backache and Periodic Pains Yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Olean, N. Y. — "Every month my blood would go to my head and I would have such headache, nosebleed, backache and pains that I could not do my work. At night I could not get my rest and nothing seemed to do me any good. I read some of your testimonials about what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others, so I decided to try it. I had only taken two bottles when I began to be better, and my back did not hurt me nor my head ache. I felt like a new woman. The Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine and I will always recommend it."—Mrs. A. D. Earls, 680 N. 6th St., Olean, N. Y.

Mrs. Kelsey adds her Testimony

Copenhagen, N. Y.—"I read your advertisement in the papers and my husband induced me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to get relief from pains and weakness. I was so weak that I could not walk at times. Now I can do my housework and help my husband out doors, too. I am willing for you to publish this letter if you think it will help others."—Mrs. Herbert Kelsey, R.F.D., Copenhagen, N.Y.

Stop Laxatives
Which Only Aggravate Constipation

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Hibbing—Many illegal votes were cast in the recent village election, according to the findings of the grand jury, but the jury says that this was done through ignorance rather than disrespect for law.

Little Falls—Hanging to the edge of the ice by his elbows until his cries for help brought rescuers, Joseph Jeandreau, 16-year-old son of Andrew Jeandreau, saved himself from drowning in the Mississippi.

St. Paul—Examinations for nurses in Minnesota will be conducted by the Minnesota State Board of Examination of Nurses, at St. Paul, Duluth and Rochester, April 27 and 28.

Moorhead—Ruby Karen Mercedes Ormsby, purebred Holstein owned by O. J. Grove, of Glyndon, at the age of three years and three months has made a record of 2,557.7 pounds of butterfat in 265 days.

Duluth — March was the coldest month in Duluth of the 53 years' history of the United States weather bureau at the Head of the Lakes, according to H. W. Richardson, government meteorologist in charge of the station.

St. James — The sale of the St. James hospital to the Sisters of St. Francis, has been completed with the delivery of the deed to the new owners. The hospital has been under the management of a St. James organization 13 years.

Kenyon—The railroad and warehouse commission has ordered a public hearing in Kenyon regarding the rebuilding of the station, of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, burned two years ago. The depot now consists of two boxcars.

Winona—Contestants of the will of Mark R. Campbell of St. Charles will take an appeal to the district court, it was announced, following admission to probate of the will, disposing of a $55,000 estate.

Albert Lea—The Farmer State bank of Hartland village, Freeborn county, has been re-organized. Alfred Christopherson, president of the First National bank of Albert Lea, has been named president and H. W. Arveson of Echo, Minn., cashier.

Rochester — A petition signed by nearly 100 residents of Oronoco, which has been a platted village for almost 70 years, has been presented to the board of commissioners of Olmsted county, as the first step to become a regularly organized community.

Owatonna—An informal organization of members of the Officers Reserve corps, completed at a recent meeting of World war officers at Rochester, contemplated the organization of a First district unit, Reserve Officers' Association of America, and plans for the formal organization of that body are now going forward.

Thief River Falls—Development of dairying in this vicinity has made such headway that the Thief River Co-operative creamery is now paying out checks to more than twenty patrons who draw in excess of $100 a month. Some of the dairymen draw nearly $300 each month for cream, and several others in excess of $200.

Ely—Five hundred men will be employed on the power transmission line between Ely and Virginia this summer, located in five or six camps, according to William Kennedy, foreman for the Phoenix Utility company. The transmission line will carry current from their hydro-electric plant at Fall Lake to Virginia, Eveleth, Ely and several other towns.

Rochester—Without a dissenting vote three organizations, the Kiwanis, the Civic and Commerce association and the Automobile club, together with the common council, the mayor and the Business and Professional Women's club voted to organize a chamber of commerce in which all other departments would be submerged and if necessary assimilated.

Annandale—The body of Vern Collins, 30 years old, was found guarded by his dog near the railway tracks a mile from South Haven. Members of a passing train crew noted the dog lying beside something resembling a man and started to investigate. At first the animal refused to permit anyone to come near the body of his master, snapping at the men who tried to call him away.

Minneapolis—The twentieth annual exposition of the American Peony society will be held in June at the Hippodrome on the Minnesota State Fair grounds midway between Minneapolis and St. Paul. Carloads of peonies from several hundred exhibitors, including the east and west coasts, will be on display. It is the first time the national peony exhibition has been held this far west. The exact dates are contingent upon the growing season.

Thief River Falls—Twenty-five purebred Duroc Jersey hogs were sold at the auction conducted by the Red River Valley Hereford farmers in this city. The total amount realized at the sale was $1,073.

Duluth—After 24 hours search for the 10 year old Katherine Paulot, who was seized while on her way to school and whisked away in an automobile, Duluth police were no nearer a solution of her mysterious abduction. They admitted, however, that the abductors had laid careful plans to conceal their identity and their avenues of escape.

Hibbing—Mayor Victor Power and his council, elected at the recent village election, have taken offices. Mayor Power announced the appointments for village offices and all were approved by the council.

Brainerd—Con O'Brien was elected mayor of Brainerd by a majority of 247 votes at the city election, according to unofficial returns made public. He defeated O. J. Bouma.

Willmar—V. E. Lawson, three times mayor of this city, lost to C. W. O'Dell by a 10 vote margin. Lawson had the indorsement of labor. The council will have a majority of labor members.

Owatonna—The city council at its meeting here completed arrangements for Owatonna's $29,000 bond issue to construct a new waterpower tower here. The bonds, the council agreed will be issued in one month.

Brainerd—The body of 6 year old Wilbert Bikke, son of Andrew Bikke, who drowned Dec. 31 in a coasting accident on the Mississippi river, was found 110 feet south of the old swimming hole. The body was coated with mud in four feet of water.

Winona—Announcement was made of the election of L. W. Smock of this city as master of Winona chapter, Rose Croix No. 5, Scottish Rite Masons, to succeed C. N. Morse, who, after holding the office 13 years, declined to accept a re-election.

Owatonna—A complete revision of schedules over its entire system will take place on April 29, when the Chicago & Northwestern railway replaces two trains on its line running through this city in compliance with a recent order to the state railway and warehouse commission.

International Falls—At a meeting here addressed by Miss Marjorie Edgar, regional director of Minnesota Girl Scouts, Miss Loretta O'Connor was selected to represent the Girl Scouts of this city at the fourth annual convention in Washington April 17 to 25.

Duluth—Methods of procedure occupied the first day of the hearing before District Judge W. A. Cant, on the petition of mining companies asking that the "north 40" of the village of Hibbing be vacated. The hearing will be resumed when introduction of evidence is expected to begin.

Mantorville—Herbert Childs was named to head the Mantorville Commercial club at its annual meeting here. Other officers selected were Miss L. Ruth, vice president, and H. L. Bergy, secretary-treasurer. The club plans to back the organization of a band and a weekly summer concert series.

Duluth—Backed by the Better Government council, Dr. Oliver S. Olson, former newspaper man, and W. Harlow Tischer, an engineer, were named at city primary to serve four years as city commissioners. The defeated candidates are Commissioners James A. Farrell and V. F. Murnian, who were candidates to succeed themselves.

Moorhead—Concordia college of this city enters upon a new program of expansion when the board of trustees closed a deal for the purchase of 65 acres of land, two blocks from the present campus, which is to become the future campus of the school. The athletic field will be located on the new site at once, trees will be planted and all buildings to be erected in the future will be located there.

Minneapolis — While three secret group indictments charging nearly a score of twin city business men, attorneys and other persons with implication in the sale or possession of bonds stolen in daring mail robberies throughout the country, totaling millions of dollars, were being returned by the federal grand jury, United States secret service operatives and postal inspectors were testifying before the jury regarding the recovery here of $80,000 in currency taken in the sensational Denver mint robbery.

Walker—Endeavoring to obtain "a fair and reasonable" settlement for the timber lands owned by Chippewa Indians on the Minnesota national forest which, according to an appraisal made by a special committee to the secretary of the interior, Jan. 16 last, are worth $1,490,195.50, E. L. Rogers, as legal representative of the Indians, has addressed an appeal to President Harding urging that the government disregard the report and arrange a new appraisal for the timber and lands which he estimates to be worth "not less than $4,000,000." Rogers is county attorney for Cass county.

St. Paul—Minnesota farm land taxes jumped 146 per cent from 1913 to 1922, according to figures made public by the United States department of agriculture crop reporting service. Minnesota farmers paid an average of 91 cents tax an acre for every acre listing as farm land in 1921-22, and 37 cents an acre in 1913-14, the statistics show. The percentage of increase in the period was greater than that of Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri. The average tax an acre remains less than that of the first three states made, however. The percentage increase is less than that of either South or North Dakota and not much larger than the average for the country.

Mankato—Dr. William A. Beach, present mayor of this city, was reelected at the city election by a margin of 136 votes over his opponent, E. V. Watters. The contest was the most bitterly fought and closely contested one ever conducted in this city.

Crookston — The election contest brought by former sheriff Oscar Bolstad against Anton Nelson, who defeated him by a 500 vote majority at the November election, was dismissed by Judge William Watts in district court here. Bolstad based his petition on alleged violations of the corrupt practises act in Nelson's campaign.

In a Hard Position.

"You seem blue these days, old chap," remarked Percy.

"Yes," agreed Alfred. "My girl says I don't love her."

"Oh, well, they often say that," comforted Percy. "But why in your case?"

"You see, I'm engaged to one of twins," explained Alfred.

"Well," as the other man stopped. "When I call they usually enter the parlor together. If I hesitate that's bad and if I kiss the wrong girl that's worse."

How Some Laws Are Made.

He was a spectator in the house during the closing hours of the legislature. He had edged his way well up toward the front, and succeeded in finding seat room on the corner of a representative's desk.

The commotion had reached the point that all one could hear was "The ayes have it."

A vote was being taken on a bill.

"Say, what are they voting on?" excitedly asked a representative of the visitor.

"I don't know, but vote no."

"No!" he called out, with the loud chorus of others.

"The ayes have it" came above the din.

No Holes in Her Nose.

Elizabeth, age three, was playing with her doll, and after putting dolly to sleep, laid her down without any covering. "Elizabeth," said her mother, "don't you know that your dolly will take cold if you leave her that way? You must cover her up."

"Oh, no, mamma," replied Elizabeth, "my dolly can't take cold; don't you see she hasn't any holes in her nose?"

Another Whack at Lawyers.

During the course of a trial some years ago, a witness was asked by the prosecuting attorney if he knew what it meant to take an oath.

He replied:

"To take an oath it means that you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

"What happens if you do not tell the truth?" asked the judge.

"If you do not tell the truth, your honor," replied the witness, "it means that you are dishonored in the sight of God, dishonored in the sight of man—in fact, you are dishonored in the sight of everyone except lawyers."—Everybody's Magazine.

FARMERS GAIN BY STOCKYARDS WAR

Slash in Selling Charges Means $500,000 Yearly to Producers.

PRESENT RATES TOO HIGH

Progressive Live Stock Company Makes 40 Per Cent Reduction After Exchange Fails to Act on Protests.

Chicago.—A saving to the agricultural interests of the United States of half a million dollars each year may be the outcome of a rate war which broke out among commission men in the stockyards here with the announcement by the Progressive Live Stock Company of a 40 per cent reduction in their charges for handling live stock in carload lots.

The Progressive Company took the bull by the horns after a committee named by the Live Stock Exchange several weeks ago to consider the question of a reduction had failed to act. The appointment of the committee followed protests from every section of the country against the high charges for selling live stock. At the time the committee was named it was freely predicted that the matter would die in the committee, and its failure to make a report has angered many of the commission men who fought for its appointment.

The farmer is paying nearly five times as much to commission men as he did during the war, in proportion to what he gets for his live stock, according to a statement issued by John Burke of the Progressive Company, composed of veteran dealers at the yards.

"Before and during the war a carload of hogs worth $3,500 was sold for $12," said Mr. Burke. "The present price of hogs is about 33 1-3 per cent of their wartime value, but the commission on a carload of hogs now worth about $1,300 is $16 and $18. Commissions for selling cattle show the same glaring increases. The farmer could have paid the higher charges during the war, but now every dollar he can save on the expense of marketing his live stock will help him in his fight to get back on a sound financial basis.

"Another charge we have decided to eliminate is the $2 a car for prorating, made when two or more consignors have live stock in the same car. Under the old rates an extra charge of $2 was made for dividing the proceeds of the sale among the shippers. This is a mere matter of bookkeeping and the commission man should absorb this charge.

"Protests against these high rates have been pouring into the Live Stock Exchange for months, and became so strong that a committee was appointed to consider a revision downward. Together with many other commission men who feel that the rates are too high, we have been waiting patiently for some action. But the committee has done nothing, and so far as we can learn has not even held a meeting. We have taken the lead in an effort to get the commission charges down to a basis fair to the farmer, who must also pay heavy freight and feed charges."

Practically every car of stock sent to the Chicago yards is consigned to some commission firm, the percentage consigned direct to the packers or Eastern shippers being almost negligible.

Miss Tillie Nyberg has been on the sick list but is now better, we are pleased to report.

Elmer Sollom of Middle River came Tuesday for a short visit at the A. L. Carlson home.

P. L. Anderson went to Duluth Wednesday for a U. S. Veterans physical examination.

Mrs. Riesberg returned home Monday from several days visit with relatives in Thief River Falls.

Rev. Nordlander of Worcester, Mass. was here Tuesday to look after his land interests northeast of of town.

George Johnson returned home Saturday from Eveleth where he has been working in the mines during the winter.

Mrs. Ludwig Sagstuen and children went to Gatzke Saturday to spend a week or two at the home of her parents.

Mrs. S. T. Hagen of Haug came last week Thursday for a few days visit at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Peter Hanson and family.

Clarence Erickson was obliged to give up work at the bank for a couple of days this week on account of a severe attack of lumbago.

Dr. Dahlin of Middle River was called Sunday to see Chas Hagglund who was very sick. The doctor was here again on Monday and advised that Mr. Haggland be taken to the Thief River Falls hospital for treatment. Mrs. Hagglund took her husband to the hospital Tuesday where it is hoped he may be able to get the desired relief. Mr. Hagglund's ailment is called a multiple abscess, and we understand the doctors consider his case as being very serious.

F. W. Kimiley of Minneapolis has been here the past week looking after his farm interests. His former tenant, Henry Thompson has moved onto a farm near Thief River Falls, and a Mr. Johnstone from Iowa has moved onto the Ramaley farm.

A family by the name of McCoy came from Thief River Falls last winter and had been helping Mr. Thompson with the chores on the above farm. When the change come they all had to leave and as Mr. McCoy had no money, he left his family here at the hotel and was going to try to make his way to Dakota, seeking work.

Mat Larson received word last week that Ole Wickstrom, a former resident of this vicinity, had died at his home in Canada.

Tarje Sordahl and Ludvik Listol and family from Canada came one day last week to visit at the Nels Sordahl and O. O. Listol home.

Next Monday Guy Anderson will commence the summer schedule on the mail route and will leave the postoffice at noon instead of in the morning.

Palmer Peterson and family left this week for Grand Forks, N. Dak. We understand Alfred Larson has rented the farm vacated by Mr. Peterson.

Arno Steinhaur bot five head of Holstein heifers of Fred Voth. Mr. Steinhauer already had two Holstein cows and three heifers, this makes a good foundation for a dairy herd.

The dredge came last week Thursday and men and teams were busy for several days hauling it out and getting it ready to set up so that work can be commenced on the ditch as soon as the weather will permit.

The Security State Bank of Middle River was closed Friday by the state banking department. The State Bank of Greenbush was recently closed. It looks as tho' the country banks were being hit hard the past year.

Mr. and Mrs. Hans Hanson have temporarily given up housekeeping while he is away and Mrs. Hanson and baby are staying at home with her folks. Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien have moved into the house vacated by the Hanson family.

G. Howard Smith of Thief River Falls was here Tuesday on business in connection with the Woodman hall. A meeting was held the same evening and The Community Hall Assn., was formed, and arrangements made to buy the above hall.

Another meeting will be held next Tuesday evening to close the deal. Here is a chance to help along with a good cause and everybody is invited to join the association. Memberships will be sold for $25.00. Everybody boost.

The ladies of Holt and vicinity showed their generosity Monday afternoon, when they gathered at the Lutheran church basement and literally loaded down a long table with gifts of dress goods, clothing, bedding, dishes, kitchen ware etc, all good substantial things, and presented them to Mrs. Leo Horien, to take the place of their household goods which were destroyed by fire last week.

In addition to the gifts, the ladies also served a fine lunch, which was greatly enjoyed by all in attendance.

TIDAL WAVE HITS PACIFIC ISLANDS

Islands Disappear, New Ones Rise as Sea Quakes Change Floor af Pacific.

Honolulu—A dispatch to the Nippu Jiji, a well informed Japanese newspaper published here, states that 1,000 perosns were killed and injured in the tidal wave which swept the Korean coast.

San Francisco—Terrific subterranean disturbances have shaken the water of the Pacific from the Asiatic mainland to the Pacific coast of North America.

Tidal waves and freak tides were reported from the coast of Korea, from the islands of Maui, Oahn and Hawaii in the Hawaiian group from San Pedro, Calif., and at the Golden Gate.

Coupled with the disturbances of a few months ago and reports to the geodetic survey that soundings showed changes were taking place in the elevation of the ocean's floor, tremendous interest was attached to these reports.

Scientists here acknowledged that the disturbance was due to earthquakes and upheavals of the ocean floor; appearances of new islands or reefs or even disappearance of small volcanic islands.

TO KEEP U. S. FLAG ON SEAS

Government to Operate Vessels If They Cannot Be Sold Without Loss.

Washington — President Harding backed his ardent championship of an adequate American merchant marine with a declaration for direct government operation of the shipping board fleet "aggressively pursued," unless the ship can be disposed of immediately without "unjustifiable sacrifice."

A first effort to dispose of the fleet by sale will be made promptly, the White House announced. The government will consolidate its foreign trade lines in order to offer purchasers established trade routes with its ships.

If it cannot find buyers at a price not involving a "sacrifice," it will call in its allocated ships, and settle down to a vigorous policy of governmental operation and let congress foot the bill.

TO KEEP CHILD AID GOAL

Organization to Maintain Care of 15,000, Says Preus, Chairman.

St. Paul—Conservation of child life, the primary object of the Near East Relief organization when it was established, will continue to be the policy of the organization, Governor J. A. O. Preus, chairman of the Minnesota Near East Relief committee, announced.

"The organiationz," said Governor Preus, "will follow the policy enunciated by Charles E. Hughes, secretary of state, regarding relinquishment of the care of adult refugees which is to be taken over by the governments of the various countries in the affected areas, but will maintain care of the 115,000 orphaned children now housed in Armenia, Georgia, Syria, Palestine and Greece."

BROKERS BALK AT INQUIRY

New Yorkers May Refuse to Furnish Data Regarding Transactions.

New York—The federal government probably will meet with considerable difficulty in its efforts to obtain data from sugar brokers, designed to show whether there is any justification for the recent sugar price increases.

Letters from the department were received by members of the New York coffee and sugar exchange, asking them to supply Hayward with records of sugar transactions, the names and addresses of their customers and other data that might show how prices were forced up.

MUSSOLINI TO FORCE CRISIS

Populist Party Resolution Ends Accord That Formed Foundation.

Rome—The fate that inexorably overtakes all European governments loomed for Premier Mussolini, and the fascist chieftain went out half way to meet it.

The populist party congress passed resolutions substantially antagonistic to the fascicti. The significance of this is that it marks the end of the entente between these two groups which has formed the foundation for Mussolini's regime. Without the populist collaboration, the fascisti would be hard put to swing affairs of state and maintain control in Italy by parliamentary means.

Opposed Daughter's Marriage.

Chicago—Mrs. Mathilde McCormick Oser and her middle aged riding master husband will receive no nuptial blessings from the house of Rockefeller. Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick has informed friends that she opposed until the last the wedding of her daughter, and there will be no forgiveness since she has acted contrary to the wishes of the family. That Mathilde through marrying Oser has probably lost all chance of obtaining a large share in the millions of her grandfather.

DRAFTING PEACE PLANS

Plan Guarantees France Against Aggression by Germany,

Paris—Louis Barthou, Minister of justice, and a committee of experts are drafting a plan for general settlement of the reparations problem, according to the Petit Journal.

The plan, the newspaper understands, also provides for guarantee of the security of France against any future German aggression.

The Barthou plan, it is understood, will be discussed in Brussels at a Franco-Belgian conference to be held next month.

Paris—France and Belgium moved in unison to make effective their occupation of the Ruhr.

Premier Poincare of France sent a code telegram to General Degoutte to make more seizures of German property, levy more fines and enforce stricter regulations governing the conduct of the Ruhr inhabitants.

Premier Theunis and Foreign Minister Jasper of Belgium left Paris for Brussels after a final agreement with Premier Poincare not to evacuate the Ruhr until Germany begins reparations payments and proves its sincerity by carrying out its obligations.

GRAIN GROWERS PLAN POOL

Three Great Organizations Plan Amalgamation of Agencies.

Fargo, N. D.—Plans for a gigantic co-operative wheat pool were formulated here at a conference of representatives of the U. S. Grain Growers, the Northwest Wheat Growers, associated, and the Equity Co-operative exchange.

The plan, which will be submitted within a few days to the three organizations for action, provides that the wheat pool shall be handled by the Northwest Wheat Growers, which will change its name to the American Wheat Growers.

The U. S. Grain Growers, under the plan, would handle the sale of consigned grain at Minneapolis, and the Equity exchange will take care of the business at Duluth. The American Wheat Growers are to lease the Equity terminal elevators at St. Paul, and use it in connection with the pool.

URGES U. S. TO WORLD COURT

Membership Is Step Toward International Peace, Secretary Says.

Des Moines, Ia.—American membership in the permanent court of international justice, organized by the League of Nations, was advocated by Secretary Herbert Hoover here as "an essential step" in the direction of world peace.

Those who have opposed membership in the league itself, he said, need not hang back from participation in the court nor fear political entanglements through its operation. He replied directly to criticisms by Senator Borah of Idaho, who, he declared, really wanted now to go "further" than the American people were willing to follow him.

PLAN HARDING VISIT JUNE 24

Chief Executive to Address Twin City Audiences En Route to Coast.

Washington—Enough of President Harding's plans for his coming trip to Alaska was revealed to justify setting down his arrival at the Twin Cities for about June 23 or 24. This calculation makes reasonable allowance for several stopovers for speeches and receptions between here and Minneapolis, as he is to leave here, it was said at the White House, on June 20.

Acts to Halt Rum Cargoes.

Vancouver, B. C.—A severe body blow was given to rum runners operating between British Columbia ports and coves of call between that province and Mexico, Washington, Oregon and California by announcement of British Columbia Attorney General A. M. Manson that from now on collectors of customs at all points of the British coast will refuse to grant clearances to "deep sea" vessels carrying liquor cargoes. Attorney General Manson was given this assurance by the minister.

URGE U. S. JOIN WORLD TRIBUNAL

Convention Indorses Harding's Move to Further International Peace.

Des Moines, Iowa—Participation by the United States in the permanent court of international justice was unqualifiedly endorsed by the National League of Women Voters here, while at the same time belief was expressed that the court did not go far enough and that "fuller and more far reaching international co-operation for the prevention of war," be entered into by the nation.

America was urged to call an international conference to conisder steps to eliminate causes of war and abolish war itself through association with other nations.

It was a new kind of "peace" move—the first clarion call in history by women of America for the nation to forget party and unite on a nonpartisan basis to secure world peace.

While the League of Nations is not mentioned in the resolution adopted, a strong pro-league sentiment prevailed and speeches were made from the floor of the convention urging that the organization run the full gamut and come out for the league. Opposition was voiced to such action.

The atmosphere was fairly charged with electricity and the huge convention hall packed to the utmost with the delegates and visitors—including outstanding political leaders of the nation from the ranks of both the Republican and Democrat parties when Miss Ruth Morgan of New York, chairman of committee on international co-operation for the prevention of war, presented the resolution.

CONGRESS WILL FACE COSTS

Saving of Half Billion Over Previous Expense Expected by Madden.

Washington—The next Congress will cause to be spent about $7,500,000,000, Representative Martin B. Madden, Republican of Illinois, chairman of the House appropriations committee, estimated.

Stupendous as that figure may seem, it will be about half a billion dollars cheaper than the last Congress, which spent more than $8,000,000,000.

There never will be another billion-dollar Congress, Madden predicted, recalling how startled the country was a few years ago when national legislators for the first time in history made appropriations in excess of a billion dollars. The country has and is growing too fast, he said.

PARTY AWAIT FOOD BY PLANE

Rain Delays Relief Flight—Three Reach Miami and Report All Safe.

Miami, Fla.—In an effort to relieve the 22 members of the party of Tamiami trail blazers, now stranded some sixty miles west of here in the fastnesses of the Everglades, an attempt is to be made to send an airplane laden with food and other necessities, into the wilderness.

Rain and low hanging clouds delayed the relief plane because it was believed impossible that the party could be sighted from the air. The three members of the party who arrived here with word that the trailers were safe, stated that while the need of food was urgent the party was not in dire straits. Members are on rations, they said.

LABOR SHORTAGE FORECAST

Unemployment Is Decreasing Steadily in All Sections, Says U. S. Bulletin

Minneapolis—A serious shortage of competent farm labor in the northwest is in prospect within the next few weeks, a bulletin on the employment situation throughout the country, issued by the federal department of labor, said. It declares that unemployment is decreasing steadily in all sections of the country and that the general situation indicates a "healthy and robust" business condition. The demand for farm help is general throughout the country, the bulletin said. There are shortages of building labor in some parts of the country, it added.

FORD PLANT WORK TO BEGIN

Survey Completed—Company to go Over Plan.

St. Paul—W. J. Mayo, chief engineer of the Ford Motor company and of the firm of Stone & Webster, Inc., Boston construction engineers, will come to the twin cities to begin actual construction of the $10,000,000 Ford plant at the high dam within 10 days or two weeks, according to information received.

Priest Admits Murder.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—"God Almighty justified it; otherwise He would not have permitted me to fire the revolver," the Rev. Charles Dillon said, confessing the slaying of the Rev. Father Henry O'Neill.

Father O'Neill, pastor of St. Augustine's Roman Catholic church here, was shot four times by Father Dillon at the supper table, dying instantly. Father Dillon alleged that Father O'Neill persecuted him. Arraignment of Father Dillon on a first degree murder charge was expected.

Lots of Experience.

A victim of chronic bronchitis called on a well-known physician to be examined. The doctor, after careful questioning, assured the patient that the ailment would respond readily to treatment.

"I suppose you must have had a great deal of experience with this disease," said the sufferer.

The physician smiled wisely, and replied:

"Why, my dear sir, I've had bronchitis myself for more than 15 years."—Baltimore Sun.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

HUSBAND HACKS WIFE TO DEATH

Steeplejack Makes Fatal Attack on Woman After a Jealous Quarrel.

FALLS DEAD IN SNOW

Pompton Lake, N. J.—A posse of 200 men with bloodhounds engaged in a wide hunt for John Manning, forty-six years old, a steeplejack from Philadelphia, suspected by police of stabbing his wife to death. The woman, with knife wounds in her body, was seen to run from her home to the street calling for help, and expired in the snow. The countryside was scoured for the alleged slayer, but no clue was found. The man hunt was resumed when a large group of citizens and farmers joined the police in the search.

Police believe jealousy was the motive for the crime. They revealed that the woman had frequently been seen in the company of a minister, who, they say, left Pompton Lake some time ago, after receiving threatening letters from an alleged anonymous writer.

Jealous of His Wife.

Manning had been jealous of his wife for several years, Police Chief Miller said. About two years ago he was locked up for attacking her, he said, and several times after that neighbors reported the couple quarreled bitterly, but no change on the husband's part was noted.

About 6:15 at night police learned that Manning was seen alighting from a bus and making his way to the home of his wife, who lived with their two children, a boy of eighteen and a daughter, fourteen years old. About 6:35 o'clock Police Chief Miller passed the house and heard quarreling. He thought little of it because of the fact that the couple had been reported quarreling before. A few minutes later Mrs. Manning ran from the house, calling for help. The chief ran in pursuit of her husband, whom he believed to have been the person with whom she quarreled, but soon lost sight of him.

Expired in the Snow.

Neither of the children was home at the time of the alleged quarrel, the daughter having gone shopping and the boy to work. Shortly after the killing a general alarm to the police of the adjacent cities and towns was sent out for the arrest of Manning. The couple had been estranged for a few years. Manning was employed in Newark up to a few days ago, it was said.

HIKES 9,000 MILES TO RICHES

Man, Aged 75 Years, on Last Lap of Trip From Miami, Fla., to Albany, N. Y.

Miami, Fla.—William Chapman, seventy-five years old, is on the last lap of his three-year "hike" from Miami, Fla., to Albany, N. Y., to get a fortune. A $5,000 legacy awaits him in Albany.

"I chew, smoke and take a nip now and then. I am going to live 75 years longer," Chapman said. "Years mean nothing."

Murder Tale Used to Swindle Priests

New York.—By posing as an army officer and pleading for money to go to Port Oglethorpe, Ga., to confess the "murder of a soldier" there, William McDonough, under arrest here, swindled 50 priests, police say. McDonough was arrested upon complaint of four of his victims who revealed his trick. He is held in $25,000 bail.

DAIRY FACTS

TIMOTHY HAY NOT GOOD FEED

Animal Husbandry Men at New York State College Point Out Superiority of Legumes.

If you want to increase the cost of producing milk, feed timothy hay to your dairy.

This is the way the animal husbandry men at the New York state college of agriculture are pointing out to the farmers of the state the superiority of legume hay over the non-legumes, such as timothy, for feeding.

They tell of an experiment which showed this clearly. Two lots of cows received identical rations aside from the hay feed. The groups were alternately fed either ten pounds of alfalfa hay or ten pounds of timothy hay. The result indicated that the alfalfa ration produced 17 per cent more milk.

For dairy cows, clover and alfalfa have practically the same value. Alfalfa sharpens the appetite and gives greater gains in weight, but excessive feeding without sufficient variety may overstimulate the kidneys.

Legume hays are good substitutes for concentrates in the ration. With all factors equal as to cows, feeds, nutritive ratio, and the like, milk production has been fully sustained in some tests by substituting eight pounds of alfalfa hay for eight pounds of wheat bran. Good soy bean hay can be used in the same way. With wheat bran or other concentrates at $45 a ton and alfalfa and clover at $20, what this means in cheapening rations the college thinks is apparent.

AGE FOR BREEDING HEIFERS

Safe Rule to Follow Is to Wait Until Animals Are at Least Seventeen Months Old.

It is a recognized method among the best dairymen that crowding heifers to breeding season never makes them as strong, and is apt to lower their production later. Breeding them too young, say at twelve to fourteen months of age, often gives trouble at calving time; they are usually smaller and not so strong as more mature heifers, and seldom have as good records.

Helfers that are well fed at the start may be bred earlier than those which have but little feed besides pasture. A safe rule to follow is to wait for breeding until they are at least seventeen months old, and later if they are not well grown.

SOY BEANS SUPPLY PROTEIN

Provide Valuable Supplement to Ration of Corn Silage, Alfalfa Hay and Oats.

Soy beans grown on the farm give promise of providing many dairymen with a valuable protein supplement which will make them independent of high-priced protein feds, say the dairymen at Iowa State college.

Experiments carried on with a number of cows showed that cracked soy beans proved to be worth $60 a ton for the feeding of milk cows when old-process linseed oilmeal was worth $45 per ton, and so they prove to be a valuable supplement to a home-grown ration of corn silage, alfalfa hay, cracked corn and ground oats. In other words, cracked soy beans, when fed with the home-grown ration mentioned, are worth one-third more than oilmeal.

PUREBREDS REPLACE SCRUBS

Nearly 1,000 Inferior Bulls Discarded in Contest Recently Closed in Kansas.

In the Kansas better-bull contest recently closed live stock men and agricultural college officials of the state replaced nearly 1,000 scrub bulls with purebreds. This is a part of an active purebred-sire campaign which the extension service of the state is conducting. A specialist in animal husbandry has been designated leader in the work and is co-operating with the United States Department of Agriculture in "Better sires better stock" activities.

DEHORN CALVES WHEN YOUNG

Caustic Stick Should Be Kept in Handy Place by All Dairymen—Horn Soon Killed.

Every dairyman should keep a caustic stick handy and dehorn calves while young. When the calf is a day or two old, the horns or "buttons" are small and can be easily taken off. Applying salve around the "button" before rubbing on the caustic will protect the skin, and the tiny horn will soon disappear. One application is usually sufficient.

Butter Made on Farms

Where millions of pounds of butter are made in the large creameries it is estimated that 60 per cent of all the butter used in the United States is made on farms, and from herds of less than 10 cows.

Successful Dairyman.

When you find a clock in the barn, a set of milk scales and a milk record sheet in daily use in the cow barn you are quite certain to be in the vicinity of a successful dairyman or of one who will succeed.

GOOD ROADS

ROAD BUILDING IS PROBLEM

Development of Railroad Systems Has Retarded Improvement of Country Highways.

The highways of the United States as they existed in the year 1900 resulted from a gradual development extending, roughly, over a period of three hundred years. During this time there was no radical change in either the vehicle or the motive power. So far as concerns the general function of the highways, in our scheme of transportation, a very great change was introduced with the beginning of railroad development, about 1820.

Prior to the development of railroads, our only means of land transportation was over the highways. Had it not been for the development of the railroad system of the United States, there is no doubt whatever, in my mind, but that we should have in the United States at the present time a system of federal and state highways comparing favorably with similar systems that were developed, first by the Romans, and later by the modern European states, writes Prof. L. E. Conrad of the Kansas State Agricultural college in the Kansas City Star.

The matter of determining the best type of road to build is not easy. The whole problem of motor operation, as it confronts the American people at the present time, has come upon us so suddenly as compared to most developments, and the problem is so stupendous, that any sensible person should be willing to admit that it is unreasonable to expect our highway commissions and highway engineers to know exactly what to do under all circumstances. It is much less reasonable to expect local road officials who have devoted comparatively little study to the subject, and who have been elected because of their high standing in the community as citizens rather than as highway experts, to have a satisfactory grasp of the problem.

The middle western states which, to me, seem best to prove this statement are Illinois, Minnesota and Nebraska. All three have state highway systems. The conditions in the three states are vastly different. The three highway commissions have adopted policies which are quite different but which are admirably adapted to the conditions in their several states.

Illinois has a large population, with nearly 700,000 automobiles and trucks registered in the year 1921. The area is comparatively small. They have constructed a large mileage of pavement.

In Minnesota, with about half of the automobile and truck registration of Illinois, and with a much larger area to be served, there has been comparatively little pavement constructed. The highway commission has confined its efforts in the main to the construction of a large mileage of gravel and graded earth roads. The state is favored with a good supply of excellent road gravel and many tourists from other states can vouch for the skill with which it has been used.

In Nebraska, with about two-thirds of the number of automobiles and trucks found in Minnesota, and also having a comparatively large area, the highway commission has considered it best to confine its efforts, for the most part, to the grading and maintenance of a large mileage of earth roads. Many travelers crossing Nebraska have been surprised by the excellent results obtained by their highway department with graded earth roads.

The people of Missouri are to be congratulated on having finally adopted the only policy for handling their state highway problem that has ever brought satisfactory results. The present expenditures may seem large, but I am convinced that before 20 years have elapsed the people of this state will be well satisfied with their investment.

RULES FOR DRAGGING

The following rules are given by the Illinois highway commission:

Use a light drag.

Haul it over the road at an angle so that a small amount of earth is pushed to the center of the road.

Drive the team at a walk.

Ride on the drag, do not walk.

Begin at one side of the road, returning up the opposite side.

Drag the road as soon after every rain as possible, but not when the mud is in such a condition as to stick to the drag.

Do not drag a dry road.

Drag whenever possible at all seasons of the year.

Education of Children

There are 30,000,000 children in the country who should be attending school, but of this number only 18,000,000 get there. Good roads would make the securing of education easier for the remaining 12,000,000 children.

Lower Cost of Living

Good roads in the country will do more to lower the high cost of living and more for the prosperity, comfort, culture and happiness of the people than things fought over in 12 presidential campaigns.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

A RAY OF SUNSHINE

IT MATTERS not how lovely we may be, nor how dread life-tides about our little selves may ebb and flow, there is always some one among our friends and acquaintances upon whom we can shed a ray of sunshine.

Some one is living under darker skies than we, longing for encouraging words or cheering smiles; some one is starving for affection which means to him or her a lamp of hope; some one is striving to overcome ruinous habits, too weak to hold his or her frail craft on a safe course.

Each one is living in a state of gloom, from which there seems to be no way of escape.

Each one needs a ray of friendship, the blessed boon which if used aright would make the whole world brighter, knit mankind closer in happiness, soothe aching hearts, dry burning tears and hide from cold stares the beggar's outstretched hand.

There is something in soul-sunshine that penetrates the toughest fibre in human nature.

So send forth this mystic cheer far and wide.

Strew flowers over the rugged path of the poor and the sorrowing, the ill and the wretched, the old and the lonely.

Pour sunshine in their hearts and see it illuminate their countenance, wing their feet and tune their tongues to praiseful songs.

Let it shine on every cross and care.

There are hungry hearts everywhere, behind walls of marble and slabs of hovels, praying for appreciation and sympathy.

Find one if we can and blow to flame the spark that kindles love. Scatter sunshine across the sea and over the land until it shall turn night to noon-tide.

We may speak different dialects, but we can punctuate our sentences with cheer and make ourselves understood, not clumsily nor dimly, but easily and clearly as the sunlight of heaven.

And if we have within us the right spirit, we can continue this beneficent work until love shall canopy the earth, faith and hope flood the dark places with glorious light and sorrow turn to gladness. Whatever the number of good deeds we may have done, however far we have flung the sunshine, there will be times in our lives when we shall feel that we have not done enough to merit the peace which is ours—unspeakably sweet and rich beyond price.

MEN YOU MAY MARRY

By E. R. PEYSER

Has a Man Like This Proposed to You?

Symptoms: Red hair—pink face—stutters. Wears brown clothes. Is generous and very handy with treats and flowers. He seems to have nothing to do but call you on the phone, and it's all you can do to understand his stuttering, happy words. He adores to talk. Sometimes you feel as if you were hung in mid-air. Waiting for him to say, "I love—you, or cats." It's most nerve racking! He is a great motorist and loves speeding—and does in this line. . . .

IN FACT

He is a speedy soul, but has grit in the tongue shaft.

Mother's Cook Book

The excess of sentiment, which is misleading in philanthropy and economics, grows acutely dangerous when it interferes with legislation or with the ordinary rulings of morality.—Agnes Repplier.

WHAT TO EAT

IF THE members of your family are fond of ginger this will be a delightful dish to serve as a dainty dessert:

Gingered Jelly.

Add one-half teacupful of cold water to one-half package of granulated gelatin; after standing ten minutes add one and one-half cupfuls of boiling water. Now add one cupful of orange juice and the juice of two lemons, three-fourths of a cupful of chopped candied ginger. Set in a cool place to harden, stirring gently during the stiffening process to mix the ginger well through the jelly. Serve in stemmed glasses, garnished with a spoonful of whipped cream and thinly sliced ginger.

Cheese Souffle.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well mixed add one-half cupful of scalded milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a dash of cayenne, one-half cupful of grated cheese, the yolks of two eggs; cook until thick. Cut and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and set in boiling water and bake 15 minutes. Cover the whole time of cooking and serve at once. A souffle like an omelet will not await a tardy guest.

What an English cookbook calls the original English rarebit is simply melted cheese to which salt is added, just as it is taken up for serving. Instead of milk, or even with it, a tablespoonful of catsup may be added, or two tablespoonfuls of chili sauce.

A piquant dish good for an open-air luncheon or in a group where onions are enjoyed, onions are sliced thin and sauted in bacon fat; when tender add the cheese and serve as soon as it is melted.

When a little chicken, ham or other meat is too small in quantity to serve, cheese, white sauce and generous seasoning makes a most tasty dish.

Has Anyone Laughed At You Because —

By ETHEL R. PEYSER

You Always Want to Go Dutch?

Going Dutch is a good plan, because it allows you to go to many a party and everyone goes away without obligation. Of course treating is a joy, yet for all practical purposes going "Dutch" allows more freedom. "Are you treating or am I," said a girl, "for if I am I feel as if I can eat all I want and I am awfully hungry." This is one argument for the "Dutch" treat. The other is that—argument time is saved and there is a good fellowship born which is worth pounds of treats. It isn't a saving in money but it is in time.

SO

Your get-away here is:

You're a good fellow and you save time in not having to think "whose turn it is to treat." Every one keeps independent.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

YOUR FRIENDS

THE man who doesn't make friends isn't worth his salt. Man is a social animal. He needs friends to talk to—and to listen to. They are the solace of his leisure hours. They are his confidants in his time of trouble. Without them he might as well be an outcast on a desert island.

Make all the friends you can. At best you will make but a few, for there will be but few men who will take you at your own value, and have enough interests in common with you to be really your friends.

But never use friendship as a means of advancement. Put business on a business basis.

Be independent of friendship in your work. Advancement obtained through friendship is obtained through favor. And what is obtained through favor is of no value.

Never make the mistake of depending on a friend in a business relationship. Often your friend can and will help you. But that sort of help is not the help you want.

Sooner or later, if you are going to get anywhere, you will discover that you must depend on yourself, and yourself alone.

Your friends can advise you, they can sympathize with you, they can if they are honest point out your mistakes to you—provided you are big enough to let them.

But neither by lending you money—or securing you positions or promotions, can they be of any true value to you.

If they are rich and powerful, they will assist you not because of your deserts, but because of their liking for you.

Through such assistance you will get a false idea of your importance, of your worth in the world.

And when you wake up some morning and see yourself in your true light you are going to be sadly disillusioned.

Make friends and keep them. Make them, if you can, among men of different callings, so that you can exchange ideas with them and broaden yourself.

Interest yourself in what they are doing, and interest them in what you are doing. Spend your leisure with them. Enjoy their comradeship. But never depend on them. Friendship was not meant for a ladder by which to climb to higher places in the world. It is too sacred for that.

EXPERIENCE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I WONDER that we worry so
And lose our way with wandering
When ev'ry hill and vale we know—
For Time has shown us ev'rything.
We know where we may walk, and where
The brambles are, the dangers lie—
For Time has set a signpost there,
Experience to guide us by.

We know the way, for other men
Have walked a thousand times before,
The world the same world it was then,
The path unchanged forevermore.
We know we need but follow on
With faithful Conscience for our guide—
We know that we shall find the dawn
Who falter not, nor turn aside.

Yet men will venture into sin,
Forget the sun, forget the star,
Will seek new lands to wander in
Where all the hidden dangers are.
Experience has marked the trail,
And Time has proved the trail is true—
Yet men will fall and fools will fail
While stars shine clear from skies of blue.

Life is no problem—life is plain:
Here is the right, and there the wrong;
And here is peace, and there is pain,
And there is sorrow, here is song.
With Conscience for our guide and friend
Experience our counsel wise,
We need not follow to the end
An earthly path to find the skies.

Cairo a Living Kaleidoscope

Moslem Woman of Cairo Wearing the Black Burko.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

Cairo, where sleep scores of Egypt's once mighty kings, not in the rock-hewn sepulchers that were prepared for them, but in glass cases, open to the gaze of the curious, will probably become the resting place of many of the objects brought to light by the most recent important tomb discovery, even though the body of Tut-ankh-amen is left where it was found. For archeological finds in Egypt are the property of the government, and at Cairo it has set up the greatest museum of Egyptian antiquities in existence.

Yet the remains of the Pharaohs are after all in alien hands, primarily Arabic, secondarily cosmopolitan, for Cairo is today what Bagdad was in the days of Haroun-al-Raschid. Just as the mantle of Rome passed west to London and New York, so the mantle of the metropolis of the Arabic speaking world has passed west and has fallen on the great city of the Nile.

Cario is a living kaleidoscope; its colored fragments are tumbled into place not merely from east to west, but from north and south as well. White-robed Bedouin, ill-clad fellah, shiny-black Sudanese and central African negro, swarthy Turk, Persian, Hindu, Mongolian, dusky Moor, Italian, Greek, Armenian, and the whiter folk from Europe, America and the antipodes—all are jumbled together in Cairo, their various tongues making a babel that can hardly be duplicated at any other spot on earth.

Down the Centuries by Trolley.

The life of Cairo is almost what you will. Do you want the finest of European hotels with the last word in luxury? They are there. Do you long for the bazaars of the true East? You will find them just around the corner. Would you see the primitive life of the humble city dweller, the inn of the desert wanderer, student life among Mohammedan youth, the crowds about the mosques, the palaces of eastern potentates—they are all within easy reach. And if you would journey swiftly and cheaply into the past you need only board an electric trolley car and be whisked through a few miles of sand to the Pyramids of Gizeh and the Sphinx.

The life that ebbs and flows along some of the streets of Cairo presents sights no less varied than its sounds. Deliberate camels move along with brightly-dressed riders perched upon them or with suspended cars in which are veiled damsels, while drummers thunder their rhythm and fife blowers emit their shrill notes. Snake-charmers pass along with their bag of snakes; magicians perform in some nook; bullock-carts and laden donkeys compete for space with shining limousines.

Gorgeous colors of every hue and shade assail the eye—a post-impressionistic fanfare of prehistoric color schemes. The poorer the Egyptian the more ragged; the more rags the more colors. Then again the Arabs denote their families and dynasties by turbans of distinctive colors. To tell a prophet's scion from a priest of today, or one dervish order for another, or any of the countless dynasties and sects apart requires a study of turban lore as complicated as the numerous insignia worn by American soldiers when they returned from France.

One thing is certain. If a turban trails the ground it means that the wearer has followed the orthodox custom of having it seven "heads" long, so that it may serve to shroud him when he dies and keep him mindful of that certain end while he lives.

The richer women, attended by eunuchs, may be seen in carriages, faces veiled to their eyes, eye lashes and lids, fingers and exposed toes darkened with henna, and bedecked with earrings, anklets, beads and bracelets. Poorer women go afoot, also veiled, garbed in plain robes highly suggestive of "Mother Hubbards."

In the street crowds, too, are the beggars whose baboons serve the purpose of the monkeys of our organ grinders, snake charmers, vendors of the ubiquitous scarabs and tiny graven images, and the Berberine bead boys.

The al fresco cafe is one of the most characteristic marks of Cairo. It is not the more or less well ordered affair of the boulevards of Paris. Sidewalks and streets in certain sections overflow with seemingly innumerable chairs and tables until often a single file of pedestrians can hardly force its way through. One gets the impression that few people need to work in Cairo. Even in the mornings the chairs are filled with apparently prosperous men sipping coffee or sweetened water, puffing cigarettes, and talking. Toward noon they disappear for their siestas, but again at four or five o'colck they are out in force and remain far into the night. Among them circulates a stream of peddlers offering for sale almost every conceivable ware from sweetmeats to mouse traps and underwear.

The dweller in Cairo who has not his servant or his group of servants is low indeed in the economic scale. These serving men carry tiny bundles for their employers—masters, one might say. They run ahead of carriages to clear the way; they fan away the flies; and one ofter another they come in troops into the presence of the prosperous to bring smoking materials or to offer a bewildering succession of drinks and foods. Life is hard and a few cents a day satisfies them. Even the porters who carry heavy bundles and the boatmen who laboriously pole the Nile craft against the current work twelve or fifteen hours for little more than as many cents.

The Oxford of Islam.

In Cairo is the Oxford of the Mohammedan world, the University of El-Azhar. It seems a queer "university" to those familiar with the higher institutions of learning of the West. Its classrooms are the halls and niches of a mosque. Its professors receive no salaries but are primarily religious officials, government employees, lawyers and the like who teach in addition to performing their regular duties. The pupils, who at times number more than 5,000, squat on mats while their instructors lecture. This premier college of the Moslem world has been in existence for nine hundred and fifty years and hundreds of thousands of students have passed through its doors. It has been the center of the Nationalist propaganda which has sought entire freedom for Egypt. Moreover, it is the hotbed of Pan-Islamism, which, like its companion movement in the past—Pan-Germanism—would combine its own culture with militarism to dominate the world. But Pan-Islamism would go further, and would bring the world, as well, under the religion of Mohammed.

At the dawn of history a city is known to have existed near the site of modern Cairo called Khere-ohe, place of combat, because Horus and Seth, of mythlogical fame, fought there. Seth found the body of his brother Osiris, cut it into fourteen parts, and scattered the pieces; whereupon Isis, wife of Osiris, hunted the fragments so that she might erect a monument for each. That is why references to so many tombs of Osiris are encountered in history.

Not until a century before the Norman conquest, a modern period of Egyptian history, was the present Cairo founded by Gonar, leader of the troops of the Fatimite Caliph Mu'izz, following the Egyptian conquest.

In the year that Columbus discovered America a plague swept Cairo which is said to have killed 12,000 citizens in a day. It was a century before that when Cairo may be said to have attained its zenith. After the plague a period of violence, rapine and murder set in, and sultans were enthroned and assassinated with dizzying speed and informality. As early as the Thirteenth century Christian persecutions took place. Since then the city has been Islam. Only a dozen years ago an excuse of the Grand Mufti for declining to approve execution of a murderer was that the crime was committed with a revolver, a weapon not mentioned in the Koran.

Napoleon's headquarters were at Cairo in 1798, following the "Battle of the Pyramids." The commander whom Bonaparte left behind was murdered. In 1811 the French family were dislodged and Cairo's independence was re-established.

ONE RIDE ENOUGH FOR HIM

Tramp Tells of Experience on the Cow-Catcher, Which He Doesn't Care to Repeat.

"I rode a cowcatcher just once," said Frisco. "Never again, unless I have to. It was out of Eldorado, Kan., over the Missouri Pacific.

"While the engine was in the station, I pipes the engineer comin' out of his cab with a little broom, and I see him dust the cowcatcher off nice and clean with it. I thinks to myself: 'Well, ain't that fine! He's dustin' her off for me.' So when his back was turned, I hops on the cowcatcher and crouches under the overhang of the boiler.

"I got by with it. Nobody saw me, and when the engine snorted out, there was yours truly smilin' like a basket of chips on the cowcatcher. But I didn't smile long. That engine was a passenger engine and kicked up an awful wind. Open yer mouth, and she'd blow you wrong side out, and so cold she felt like an icicle laid against your eyeballs."

"Didn't hit anything, did you?"

"Oh, boy! Wait a minute! I'm comin' to that. Well, as I sat there slappin' myself, tryin' to keep warm, the headlight sprayed out across the prairie and attracted all the bugs in Kansas. My mouth and eyes and shirt got full of 'em, and them big, shiny, black bugs hurt, too, when they hit you between the eyes. The light was so bright I could see big, bloaty hop toads pantin' along between the rails 25 yards ahead.

"Purty soon, a quarter mile away, at a crossing, I see an old white cow with her calf standin' on the track. The light didn't seem to bother her none. She just stood there munchin' her cud and blinkin' as we bore down on her. The old engine began tootin' like you hear 'em on New Year's eve. I sort o' slid down on the back of my neck and h'isted my heels up in the air so's bossy would hit them first. Well, just before we reached her, she ambled calmly off the track, flickin' her tail, and the calf nosin' her in the flanks as she went.

"Say, I was so weak for a little while I couldn't sit up. I just laid there on my neck prayin' for strength. Don't never mention cowcatcher to me again. It makes me nervous to talk about it."—From "Adventures of a Scholar-Tramp" by Glen Mullin, in the Century Magazine.

Who Picked the Carpet.

The office of Robert H. Bryson, postmaster, has been glorified by the acquisition of a new carpet. More of the carpet later. As to the acquisition, it was thus: The Treasury department forwarded for inspection and choice of the postmaster, a batch of carpet samples. Beautiful tints of green and blue and gray and of other approved colors were included. Mr. Bryson called around him his office force and the work of choosing a carpet worthy the inner shrine began. The only immediate and unanimous action was the discarding of the sample of a golden brownish carpet that somehow seemed to be meant for other places than a post office. At last a tasty one of green was chosen and the order for such a carpet went forth.

The carpet came and was laid on the floor of the office. It is of a startling golden brownish color, touches of sunset glow and autumn pumpkins tending to heighten the contrast between it and the mahogany woodwork. Mr. Bryson and his committee never tire of gazing on this carpet and wondering why they did not choose it and discard the green one.—Indianapolis News.

Earrings Too Heavy.

The heavy gypsy earrings of the latest fashion are stretching into triangular shapes the ears of women who wear them and permanently disfiguring them, say London doctors. Some of the new earrings weigh as much as four ounces.

Beauty doctors declare that they have an increasing number of clients who come to them to have their ears massaged so as to bring them back to their original shape. This is about the only method which doctors know to restore the ear to its natural shape without an operation.

Paris women have discovered a way by which they may wear the ornaments and still preserve the beauty of their ears. They wear earrings attached to their hats or evening head dresses.

Why a Two-Car Garage?

"George, dear."

"Yes."

"Now that we have moved into this beautiful new home there is something I must tell you."

"What is it?"

"Of course I know that you've spent a lot of money for the house and its furnishings, and it is lovely and all that. But there is still something lacking."

"What is it, my dear?"

"We now have a two-car garage. Have you thought of that?"

"What of it? Nearly everybody has a two-car garage nowadays."

"I know that, George, but I think we simply must buy the other car."

Radio Concerns Die.

Less than one-half the concerns that embarked as manufacturers in the radio industries are now alive and it is believed that 25 per cent of the survivors are in financial straits at the present time. This state of affairs is due to overproduction and putting poor material upon the market.

British Taxation Heavy.

Britain's annual taxation per head of the population now amounts to more than $100.

SUPPOSE, when the business of legislating for the nation is resumed next December at the capitol, the clerk of the house should call the roll of the Sixty-seventh instead of the Sixty-eighth congress. When he got to "Cannon" there would be no response. There would be silence when he called "Volstead." And between the two many names would be called without reply. In the senate the clerk would get no answer to "Calder"; none to "Williams." And all along the line there would be silent places. In short, 140 members of the Sixty-seventh congress gave up their places, as compared with 129 in the Sixty-sixth. The Republicans, however, remain in control of both houses. So the interest is rather in the changes in personnel. Some of the absentees will be missed.

Imagine the house without "Uncle Joe" Cannon of Illinois! Just the same he has voluntarily quit at the age of eighty-seven, after forty-six years of actual service. Of the 371 senators, representatives and delegates in congress when he entered fifty years ago there was not a single one left when he said "good-by." Blaine, the "plumed knight," was then speaker. On the floor were Garfield of Ohio; Hoar and Ben Butler of Massachusetts; Frye and Hale of Maine; "Sunset" Cox of New York; Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia; Mills of Texas. In the senate were Cameron of Pennsylvania; Roscoe Conkling of New York; "War-Governor" Morton of Indiana; John Sherman of Ohio. All giants—and all dead these many years. "Uncle Joe" holds the service record. The house held a celebration December 29, 1920, when he passed the record of Justin Smith Morrill of Vermont whose service in the house and senate aggregated 43 years, 9 months and 25 days.

The senate will lose a gentleman and a scholar in John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, who voluntarily retires at the age of sixty-nine after twelve years of service and eighteen in the house. "In the words of John Allen," he says, "I am going to spend the short remainder of my life in re-establishing my peace with God and my reputation as a gentleman." He's going to his plantation home, Cedar Grove, near Yazoo City, to cut his flowers while the dew is on them, read and write in his library and take a nap after dinner. "Just about dusk," he says, "I shall have a concert by my own band—owned by me if by anybody else but God Almighty. They are the mocking birds that nest in my trees." He has refused an offer of $30,000 to write one article a week for a newspaper syndicate. So he probably means to do just as he says.

The next house will seem queer without Frank Wheeler Mondell as majority leader. He's the only representative Wyoming has had for 12 successive terms and he's seen twenty-six years of service, during which he missed but seven days. His retirement from the house is in a sense voluntary—that is, he resigned to contest unsuccessfully for the senate seat of John B. Kendrick, Democrat. However, his cloud has a silver lining. The house gave him a very handsome silver service and he gets the place of director of the war finance corporation at a salary nearly double that of a representative.

Andrew J. Volstead—no need to say who he is—will be missing in the next house after ten consecutive terms of servce. You may look upon his defeat either as a joke or a tragedy. Anyway, the chairman of the judiciary committee was beaten by O. J. Kvale, Farmer-Laborite, who was said during the campaign to be "drier than Volstead."

A distinguished volunteer absentee from the house will be Joseph W. Fordney of Michigan, chairman of the ways and means committee and largely responsible for the McCumber-Fordney tariff act. He has served continuously for 12 terms and goes home to his farm to play with his grandchildren and raise blooded cattle. He's seventy—just the right age to enjoy the change.

Senator Porter J. McCumber of North Dakota, joint sponsor with Fordney of the tariff act, also drops out, but not voluntarily. His friends take his defeat much to heart, inasmuch as after twenty-four years of service he had at last succeeded to the coveted chairmanship of the finance committee, through the death of Senator Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania.

Senator Atlee Pomerene's dignified figure will no longer ornament the senate. What a change is there! Defeat for re-election robbed him of a possible and even probable Democratic presidential nomination in 1924.

Gilbert M. Hitchcock, who was President Wilson's mouthpiece in the fight over the League of Nations, will still be seen in Washington, but as a correspondent for his own Omaha newspaper and not as senator from Nebraska. It is said that he intends to come back.

Senator Henry S. New of Indiana does not drop out of the official life of the capital, inasmuch as he succeeds Dr. Hubert Work as postmaster general, the latter succeeding Albert B. Fall as secretary of the interior. Beveridge beat New in the Republican primaries, it will be remembered, and Samuel M. Ralston beat Beveridge in the election.

Senator Miles Poindexter of Washington, though lost to sight as ambassador to far-away Peru, will be to memory dear. His successor, Charles C. Dill, will be the youngest senator; he is but thirty-nine.

A veteran senator who drops out is Charles A. Culberson of Texas. He succeeded Roger Q. Mills in 1899 and twenty-four years of service have made him a familiar figure in the upper house. The election of Earl B. Mayfield, his successor, will be contested in the senate.

Kansas loses the chairmanship of the powerful rules committee of the house by declining to return Philip Pitt Campbell, a veteran of twenty years' consecutive service.

Two Republican members of congress who will be found in the senate instead of the house are Simeon D. Fessof Ohio, who defeated Senator Pomerene, and Frank L. Greene of Vermont, the successor of Senator Page, who voluntarily leaves.

Representative Horace M. Towner of Iowa, identified with much important legislation, resigned from the Sixty-seventh congress to become governor of Porto Rico in place of E. Mont Reily. He was a federal judge before being elected to the Sixty-second congress.

Senator Frank B. Kellogg of Minnesota, who achieved fame as a "trust-buster" before he entered the senate in 1916, is succeeded by Henrik Shipstead, a Farmer-Laborite dentist.

The next house will genuinely miss the late James R. Mann of Illinois, who died last November after serving thirteen consecutive terms. He was a useful member, with a genius for procedure and a great liking for essential facts.

W. Bourke Cockran, New York, the orator of the house, died just before adjournment. Senator Samuel D. Nicholson of Colorado, Republican, died after adjournment. His successor will presumably be a Democrat.

William H. Stafford of Wisconsin, a "treasury watchdog" of sorts, will be succeeded by Victor Berger of Wisconsin, who will be the only Socialist in the house, Meyer London of New York having failed of re-election.

The Sixty-eighth congress will have but one "lady member"—Representative Mae Ellen Nolan of California—who succeeds her late husband, John I. Nolan. Miss Alice Robertson of Oklahoma and Mrs. Winnifred Huck Mason of Illinois failed to be re-elected. "Aunt Alice" says some of the house members should be spanked for talking too much.

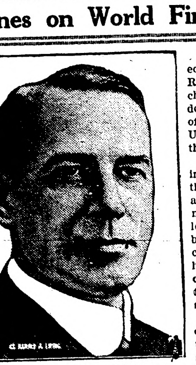
Barnes on World Financial Conference



Conclusions regarding Europe's economic problems, reached by the Rome congress of the international chamber of commerce, are fully endorsed by President Julius H. Barnes of the chamber of commerce of the United States. He says, among other things:

"The resolution adopted, while laying emphasis on the reparations question, expresses the conviction of the assembled business leaders of many nationalities that the related problems of the allied debts, national budgets, international credits and exchange, must be solved in one comprehensive whole. The international chamber expresses the view that a financial conference for a complete settlement is inevitable.

"There is a definite code of requirements essential to each phase of the settlements to be made. The reparations agreement must represent the determination of the aggressor nation in the great war to devote all of its resources to the utmost of its ability to fulfilling its obligations; while any plan of settlement must also assure hereafter the security of national frontiers, eliminating recurring alarms of war.

"Interallied war debts must be maintained at a high standard among international obligations, which prohibits the general application of any principle of cancellation; but each debt should be surveyed with due regard for the ability of the debtor nation to pay. National budgets must insure governmental economy."

Lord Robert Cecil Visits Us to Talk

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

Lord Robert Cecil is here on a visit of a month or more. He is the guest of the Foreign Policy association, and will deliver several addresses on the European situation. He is, however, most anxious that his visit shall not be supposed to be undertaken in a missionary spirit.

"I have been asked to speak on several matters on which I have special information," he said, but I hope it will not be thought that I am interfering in American politics or am coming to preach the League of Nations."

Few names in British history are better known than Cecil. There are Cecils dotted through British history as regularly as bank holidays. One of Lord Robert's forefathers was prime minister to Queen Bess in the days when a Spanish armada set sail for the Cliffs of Dover. Two more grandfathers, one on another's heels, served Queen Victoria as premier and president of the privy council. Today, in the present generation, there are five Cecil brothers living—all prominent. One, eldest and heir to the title "Marquis of Salisbury," is a famous Tory—lord president of the council in the new cabinet of Bonar Law. Altogether it is a spectacular family.

Work Affecting the Whole Community

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Two Olsons in Chicago—United States District Attorney Edwin A. Olson and Chief Justice Harry Olson of the municipal courts—are especially active just now in work that affects the welfare of many people. The district attorney is engaged in a special campaign against "dope" peddlers and dealers in illegal narcotics. He is working in accordance with special instructions from Washington, the result of a conference with Rush L. Holland, personal representative of Attorney General Daugherty.

Chief Justice Olson of the municipal courts (portrait herewith) has just announced that the police department of Chicago have begun keeping watch on the homes and relatives of mentally unsound persons who pass through the psychopathic laboratory.

"We will do this out of kindness, not in anger," he said. "A mentally deficient person is sick. You would not expect a cripple with only one leg to walk normally. Neither should you expect one with a part of his brain gone to behave in a rational manner."

Then the chief justice said that most of the offenders brought to court were suffering from hereditary mental troubles, and he declared that it lay in the power of the courts and the police to correct them in the future before they did another wrong.

Judge Olson added that it was also part of police duty to locate members of the unfortunate's family, to learn if others also were afflicted. He said many schools and churches were aiding him in this work.

Congress May Investigate Fascisti Here

© Western Newspaper Union

Denouncing the organization of the Italian Fascisti in the United States as "reprehensible to the best American institutions," Senator William J. King, Democrat, of Utah said that the next congress would be asked to investigate the "black shirt" movement.

"For naturalized Italians to join such alien organizations is to betray their loyalty to the American constitution and for unnaturalized Italians to join is a betrayal of our hospitality," King said. "Such an organization as the "black shirts" cannot exist in the United States and will not exist even if a congressional investigation is necessary to stop it.

"I think, however, the movement will die without official action. This organization, based primarily on principles of force and usurpation of authority, utterly conflicts with our own principles of liberty and government by the ballot. Our own institutions afford adequate protection of life, property and pursuit of happiness and there is no room in America for alien institutions such as the Fascisti.

"If its organization has grown formidable by December I will ask for a congressional investigation so the non-naturalized aliens in back of it can be deported."

"You say," I suggested, "that Slyke was killed about two o'clock in the morning. The girl might have come to the house and killed him; then gone back to her uncle's, and told the story about being afraid to go through the woods alone. She said it was three o'clock when he came with her to the house. That's a good alibi, of course; but suppose she had been to the house once before. The dog didn't bark, because he knew her. She was also in the house when the revolver disappeared. If you claim the taking of the gun was foolish, why can it not be said to be the kind of an illogical thing a woman would do? The average man would know it was no use to remove the gun. You remember how startled the aunt was when she saw the girl."

Bartley had listened with an amused smile that grew broader as I talked. Though I had not been serious when I began, the more I thought of the idea the more plausible my suggestion sounded. Bartley himself had said that in the case we must build up a theory first, and then see if the facts would fit it.

When I had ended, he said that he himself had, at first, considered the possibility of the girl's having done it, but had decided against it. He reminded me that Slyke had been killed on the balcony, and carried down two flights of stairs, and that Slyke weighed one hundred and fifty pounds, the girl not a hundred. Remembering that and the task it was to carry such a heavy weight down so many stairs, did I still think the girl could have done it?

My face turned red with chagrin, and, seeing that I was hurt, he smiled at me kindly and apologized.

"I didn't intend to hurt your feelings, Pelt. You are like all newspaper men, you enjoy building up a story out of nothing. In this affair, we mustn't let ourselves get sidetracked. We shall need all the clear thinking we can do."

Anxious to redeem myself, I said, "John, we have been going on the theory that some one from outside came into the house and killed Slyke, a mysterious visitor who arrived after Lawrence had left. Perhaps the murderer was hiding in the house all the time."

He gave me an interested look and an approving nod.

"Suppose," I went on, "that the murderer was on the balcony. It was a good place to hide. It was so dark up there that he could not have been seen from the ground. Then let us assume that Slyke heard a sound above him when he was in the room below the balcony, and went up to see what it was. The person may have made the sound on purpose to attract his attention. At any rate, when he does come out on the balcony, he is killed."

Bartley did not speak for a while, turning my suggestion over in his mind. Then he answered, "You may be right. It is possible that some one was waiting for him to come upstairs. But do not forget that, if that is so, the person would have had to wait there for a long time; for he could not tell when Slyke would come into the room below the balcony. Still, your suggestion is well worth keeping in mind."

Although he spoke so favorably of my idea, I could see that he did not really agree with me.

I yawned and Bartley glanced at his watch. It was after three, and we should have been in bed several hours ago. He rose, and taking two objects from his pocket placed them on the desk. I leaned over to see what they were.

Lying black and sinister on the dark mahogany surface were the revolver that had been taken from Slyke's hand and hidden in the vault, and a little cork stopper, its end covered with red wax that showed where a knife had been used on it.

"Look," Bartley said, pointing at them with a laugh. "The sole result of a day's work. The only clues we have are before us. One is a revolver that did not have a finger print on it; the other a little stopper that might have come from anywhere. From these we have to discover the murderer."

Again he laughed. I stood looking at the two objects, thinking how insignificant they were and wishing they could speak and tell their story. Catching my mood, his face grew grave. He stood looking at them for a moment, then with a sudden gesture swept them into a small box saying, "We ought to have been in bed hours ago."

I had reached my room and was pulling down the bed covers when he called to me. I returned to his room and found him sitting on the edge of his bed taking off his shoes.

"I forgot to tell you, Pelt, that when we reach the solution of this murder, somehow or other whisky will be mixed up with it. When you told me that Slyke had been selling whisky to his friends, I knew that something was wrong. The finding of the liquor in his own vault makes me more certain. He must have known that that whisky was there. Why, under heaven, a man that had the money Slyke was presumed to have had, should secrete whisky on his grounds is more than I know."

"But," I reminded him, "you say he did not have as much money as people thought he had."

"Yes, that is true. The lawyer confirmed what I had heard about his losses. Whisky and Slyke had a good deal in common, you will find."

He yawned, and I started again for my room. As I reached the door he added, "Black thinks the chauffeur killed Slyke. Maybe he did. Still"—and he laughed—"I never saw a man with a square head that knew very much. And that detective certainly has a square head."

And with that absurd remark in my mind, I went to bed.

CHAPTER VIII

The Inquest Opens.

It was only natural, after the lateness of the hour at which I went to bed, that I should oversleep the next morning. It was well after nine before I entered the breakfast room; I found no one there but a servant who told me that the others had eaten some time before. When I had finished my breakfast I went in search of Bartley, and found him in the sun parlor surrounded by a mass of newspapers. He waved to me and went on reading.

The inquest was not to be held until one o'clock; and I wondered what Bartley wanted me to do with my morning. As if in answer to my thought, he looked up and said he was going into Saratoga on some errands, and suggested that I go with him and interview the girl friend with whom Ruth had intended to spend the night.

The first place we stopped on our arrival in town was at a large drug store, where Bartley asked to see the proprietor. When he appeared, Bartley placed a small object on the counter before him.

"Can you give me any idea," he asked, "what sort of a bottle that cork came from?"

The object was the little stopper with the red wax which he had showed me the night before. Picking it up, the druggist looked at it very carefully. He turned it over in his hand, scratched the wax with a knife, and took so long in replying that I thought he never would speak.

"I think I can," he said at last. "The little cork not only had its top covered with red wax, but the wax ran down the sides of the bottle. In order to get it open, it was necessary to cut the wax away. It looks to me as if it came from a Park Graham bottle."

"You mean the drug firm?" Bartley asked.

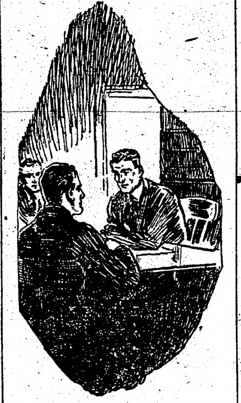
"Yes. I will show you."

He went behind the screen and returned in a second with a little bottle in his hand. It was but a few inches long, and the cork stopper was covered in the same manner with red wax, and part of it had run down the sides of the bottle. It was the mate to the stopper that Bartley had found. Bartley examined the bottle carefully, noted the label, and returned it to the druggist.

When we were again in the automobile, Bartley said, "I wish I were as sure what that stopper was doing in that room as the druggist is of the kind of a bottle it came out of."

Bartley's real object in coming to town was, however, to visit the jail and find out from Roche whether the chauffeur had told what he knew or not. I left him at the jail door, promising to return within an hour, and went in search of the young woman with whom Slyke's step-daughter had expected to spend the night.

When I found her, Miss Morton bore out all that Ruth had said about the way she had happened to go home the night of the murder. They had been to a dance together, and on the way back the car had broken down near the entrance to the Slyke estate. Ruth said, as she was so near, she might as well go home. One of the young men had gone with her to the little cottage where her uncle lived. He had waited until the old man had come downstairs, and had then rejoined his party. Ruth's story had been true, and I saw how very foolish my suggestion to Bartley had been that she might have committed the murder.



He Suggested That, If It Were Murder, Someone From Saratoga Might Have Committed the Crime.

When I returned to the jail, about an hour later, I found that Bartley had gone to Doctor King's office, and I followed him there at once. It was the usual physician's office, with cases of instruments along the walls and a flat-top desk in the center of the room. Bartley and the doctor were bending over a small pad when I entered, and Bartley told me that the doctor had been drawing for him a little map of the roads around the Slyke estate. The doctor looked older than when I had seen him first, far more tired and nervous. It took several years to get over shell shock, from which he suffered, he told us, and he had been very foolish to start to practice again so soon after his return from the front. He recounted a few of his war experiences, and they were enough to have broken any man. He said that, as soon as his duties in regard to the Slyke case were over, he was going to take a rest. All the time he talked to us he played with a pencil or tapped the desk in front of him.

We spoke of the inquest, and he told us that he did not need to call a coroner's jury unless he wished. The facts were so complex or so simple—it was hard to say which—that a jury would be confused by them. He admitted that there was no doubt that Slyke had been murdered, but doubted if any jury would bring in a verdict of murder on such slight evidence as we had. He suggested that, if it were murder, some one from Saratoga might have committed the crime. It was not a bad suggestion, and to my surprise Bartley seemed to regard it favorably. The doctor mentioned the chauffeur's arrest, and said that he had only known the man by sight. We talked for an hour or more, then returned home.

Bartley was in his room changing his suit for luncheon, when a telephone call came for him. When he returned he told me that the call had been from Mr. Slyke's lawyer. He had 'phoned him, Bartley said, that among the papers in the safe was an envelope with ten thousand dollars in bills in it, and that the bank had informed him that, on the day of our arrival Slyke had deposited thirteen thousand dollars with them.

While this was interesting news, I could not see that it was of any importance to us, and said as much to Bartley. He half smiled as he reminded me that ten thousand dollars was a lot of money to keep in the house, and added that it was strange that Slyke should deposit thirteen and retain another ten in his house. He wondered if his keeping the money had any relation to the visitor that he was expecting. At any rate, the man had not gotten the money, if that had been what he was after.

Luncheon over, Currie, Bartley and I started for the inquest. The newspapers had evidently received a tip that there was more in Slyke's death than had appeared, for when we arrived we were forced to run a gauntlet of reporters, who recognized Bartley at once and crowded around him. They realized that, if he were interested in the case, it was of more importance than they had suspected and wanted to know if he did no have some information to give them. With a laugh at their insistence, he replied that he did not; but, when he had, he would see that they were the ones to get it.

There were a number of cars in front of the house and a small crowd of men standing about in twos and threes. Just as we turned to mount the steps, Lawrence drove up and greeted us with a rather forced smile.

The inquest was to be held in the large living room in which the burglars had been found. Though it was not a public hearing open to every one, there were a goodly number of people present.

Doctor King and the other officials had not yet arrived; and Black, who was talking to a group of men, left them and came to greet us. He told us that the chauffeur, Briffeur, was to be brought from the jail by Roche, and that he thought his testimony would make a sensation. Bartley seemed to understand what he meant, though I did not. The chauffeur had refused to talk and had answered all questions by saying that he would tell what he knew at the inquest. All attempts to find out what that might be had failed.

Bartley asked Black if he still thought that the chauffeur was guilty of the murder. Black countered by stating that he did not believe that anyone else knew as much about the affair as he did. It was his opinion that, if the chauffeur had not killed him, he at least knew something about the crime. One thing the man had admitted when questioned, and that was that, when he testified, he would ruin several reputations. Bartley was much interested, and told Black that he wished he would ask Roche not to bring Briffeur into the courtroom until it was time for him to give his testimony.

Enslavement of Negroes.

The enslavement of the African race for commercial purposes had its beginning in southern Europe about half a century before the discovery of America by Columbus. It was carried to Central and South America by the Spaniards, and it existed there a hundred years before being transplanted to the English colonies of North America. From a small beginning made in Virginia the institution grew and spread to other colonies as they were founded, and at the opening of the Revolution there were about 600,000 slaves in the colonies.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Much Interest Being Shown in the Large Number of Women Safely Carried Through the Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Following Letters Are Impressive

Owing to modern methods of living, few woman approach this perfectly natural change without experiencing very annoying and often painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, nervousness, headaches, melancholia and irritability are only a few of the symptoms incident to this trying period of a woman's life, and the following letters prove the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to overcome these abnormal conditions.

"Fisherville, Ky.—"For several months I was under the doctor's care as he said my nervousness, chills, hot flashes and weakness was caused by the Change of Life, but I did not seem to get any better. I was not able to work and spent most of my time in bed. A friend called to see me and asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I cannot tell you how much good the medicine did me, as I had such a hard time before taking it. I can only advise every woman passing through the Change of Life to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it did so much for me."—Mrs. EDWARD B. NEAL, Star Route, Fisherville, Ky.

TURKS MASSING BORDER TROOPS

Paris Not Hopeful Over Lausanne Parley Outlook—Expect Pressure Attempt.

SOVIET NOT INVITED

Joseph Grew Will Probably Be Sole American Representative—Await Action of Allies in Selecting Delegates to Parley.

Paris—Considerable pessimism is being voiced in French circles as to prospects of the early conclusion of peace with Turkey through the efforts to be resumed at Lausanne next week. A high official of the government said that the massing of Turkish troops on the frontiers of the territories for which France and England have mandates in Asia Minor, news of which has been received in Paris, must be taken as indicating a plan by the Turks to apply pressure on the allies to aid the Turkish plenipotentiaries in their bargaining at Lausanne, thus giving promise of long drawn out and difficult negotiations.

Grew U. S. Delegate.

Washington—Minister Joseph Grew, at Geneva, probably will be the sole American representative at Lausanne when the Near East peace conference reconvenes.

Final decision of the question, it was said, will await the appointment of delegates by Great Britain, France and Italy. In the event those powers choose a larger representation than that at present contemplated by the United States, Ambassador Child at Rome will be designated to act with Mr. Grew.

Soviet Not Invited.

London—The Soviet Russian government has not been invited to participate in the renewed Near East conference at Lausanne, it was confirmed in the house of commons by Ronald McNeil, under secretary for foreign affairs.

LAKE SEASON TO OPEN LATE

30 to 36 Inches of Ice in Whitefish Bay Blocks Traffic.

Duluth, Minn.—With the date of the expected opening of navigation past, head of the lakes vesselmen were hoping for a break in the weather and warm rains to clear the ice fields which have Lake Superior securely locked to lake traffic.

Mariners expect one of the heaviest early season vessel movements in recent years when the floes, frozen to the almost unprecedented depth of three feet in some places, finally are dislodged from the eastern and western extremities of the "largest" lake.

Grain elevators at the Canadian and American heads of the lakes hold capacity stocks awaiting to be shipped to Buffalo. Ore docks at Duluth, Minn., Superior, Wis., Two Harbors, Minn., Escanaba, Mich., Ashland, Wis., and Marquette, Mich., loading points for the Lake Superior mining district, are filling up under the pressure of the long trains of loaded cars which have been moving from the mines for two weeks. Coal dock operators have large orders to fill with the anthracite coal cargoes which are being loaded on lake freighters at lower lake ports.

Bay Is Locked.

The average opening date for the last 32 years is April 21, but vesselmen believe May 1 to be the earliest possible date for 1923.

Whitefish bay, through which all interlake traffic naturally must pass, and usually the last section of Lake Superior to clear, is frozen solidly with from 30 to 36 inches of ice, the Grand Marais, Mich., coast guard station reported to the head of the lakes office.

The Duluth-Superior harbor is covered with about two feet of ice while an ice field averaging one foot in depth extends 75 miles into the lake.

JAP TREATY IS SCRAPPED

Formal Cancellation of Pact Negotiated by Secretary Hughes.

Washington—Cancellation of the Lansing-Ishii agreement between the United States and Japan was formally announced by the state department in a statement making public an exchange of notes between Secretary Hughes and Masanao Hanihara, the Japanese ambassador.

The exchange of notes set forth that in the "light of the understanding arrived at by the Washington conference on the limitation of armament, the American and Japanese governments are agreed to consider the Lansing-Ishii correspondence of November 2, 1917, as cancelled and of no further force or effect."

Late Spring Hard on Pigs.

Sioux City, Iowa.—One and a half million young pigs weer lost by farmers of Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Minnesota as a result of the cold weather and blizzard which prevailed throughout the month of March, according to figures compiled by W. J. Kennedy, vice president of the Serum company. The greatest loss occurred in Iowa, where 800,00 pigs were lost, more than the combined losses of the other three states. Minnesota and South Dakota each lost 200,000 of the young porkers.

Dispersing clouds by magnetized sand is only half the trick. How to make 'em is the other half. Probably making clouds is the more difficult half, although it is only evaporation on a large scale. GREAT ARTISTS IN DISCORD

Famous Italian Painters Evidently Were Not Easy Persons to Get Along With.

In the golden ages of art in Italy, Michelangelo, Leonardo and Raphael painted side by side in Florence for a short time. There was continual discord between Leonardo and Michelangelo causing the latter to leave Florence. Not to be outdone in courtesy or discourtesy, Leonardo departed for France. Although we should like to think of the masters living in harmony, it would seem that considerable friction existed among them.

Michelangelo, say his commentators, had a particularly caustic tongue. He could not brook criticism. Francia, the painter and goldsmith, who went to see a bronze statue of Pope Julius II, ordered by that pontiff and which the master had just finished, was thought to have censured it. After calling him a dunce before the people standing near, Michelangelo remarked to a son of Francia, noted for his beauty: "The living figures made by the father are handsomer than those he paints."

Try a pipeful or two direct from the factory

Not that it will be any better than the Edgeworth you buy in a store, but we want you to have your first Edgeworth smoke at our expense.

You may repay us by finding that Edgeworth just suits your taste. And if it doesn't—for there are some few men to whom Edgeworth is not just the thing—there's no harm done.

We are glad enough to send free samples in the same spirit that we'd hand you our pouch if circumstances permitted. We wish it were possible to save you even the little trouble of writing for Edgeworth.

Edgeworth is a likable smoke. Men who have tried it and found it to be the right tobacco for them never think of smoking other tobaccos. They'll tell you there are many good tobaccos—and there are. And when you offer them your pouch with "stranger" tobacco in it, they may use up a pipeful just to be friendly.

But notice how quickly they get back to their beloved Edgeworth!

Day after day Edgeworth fans write to us. They tell us human little stories, friendly anecdotes centering around Edgeworth. Often it is the number of years they have smoked Edgeworth that prompted them to write.

Knowing how hard it is for the average man to write letters, we consider these unsolicited messages the greatest tribute to Edgeworth we could possibly have—greater even than the increasing sales. It gives the business of making tobacco a pleasure that runs through the whole gamut—from factory executive to the smoker in the backwoods.

If you have never tried Edgeworth, let us repeat our offer, "Try a pipeful or two direct from the factory." All you have to do is to write "Let me try a pipeful or two" on a postcard, sign your name and address and send the postcard to us. The address is Larus & Brother Co., 73 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va. If you want to add the name of your tobacco dealer, we'll make sure that he has Edgeworth in stock.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

CHEMIST THE "CZAR" OF CEMENT MANUFACTURE

High and uniform quality results from his rigid tests and orders

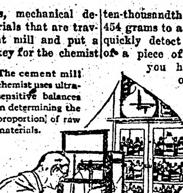
Every eight seconds, mechanical devices dip into the materials that are traveling through a cement mill and put a sample under lock and key for the chemist to test. Chemists are "the czars" of a cement plant and chemistry is their law.

Few factory processes require more care than the making of cement—thousands of test samples being taken in a day's run at a cement plant because cement must be tested in a variety of ways for numerous qualities. It is under the chemist's instructions that workmen proportion the raw materials.

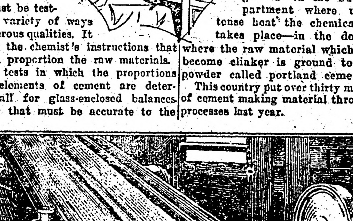
These tests in which the proportions of the elements of cement are determined call for glass-enclosed balances or scales that must be accurate to the ten-thousandth of a gram. There are 454 grams to a pound. Such balances will quickly detect the difference in weight of a piece of paper, before and after you have written your name on it.

The "rule" of the chemist is seen and felt at every point in the process of cement manufacture—in the quarry or pit where raw materials are obtained—in the departments where raw materials are proportioned, mixed and ground—in the burning department where under intense heat the chemical change takes place—in the department where the raw material which has now become clinker is ground to the fine powder called portland cement.

This country put over thirty million tons of cement making material through these processes last year.



The cement mill chemist uses ultra-sensitive balances in determining the proportion of raw materials.



This device takes a test sample for the chemist every 8 seconds. "B" is the cement on a moving belt, leaving the grinding mills. "C" is a revolving hollow shaft. As the dipper picks up a bit of the flour-like material it is carried through the shaft "C" and deposited in the locked box "A".

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Stanislaw Kubinski and Anna Kubinski, his wife, Mortgagors, to Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, bearing date the 15th day of September, 1921, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, 1921, at 8 A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 507,

And whereas, the said Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, has duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions thereof, and whereas there is due at the date of this notice upon said Mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $6,828.60, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the Mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lot Three (3), Southeast quarter (SE¼) of Northwest quarter (NW¼), and East half (E½) of Southwest quarter (SW¼) of Section Four (4), in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty (40) West, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front Door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 5th day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $6,828.60, and interest and taxes, if any, on said premises, and attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Four Hundred Eighty-five ($485.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by J. E. Flynn and Helen Flynn, his wife, Mortgagors, to Charles Schwartz, Mortgagee, bearing date the 1st day of March, 1922, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 20th day of March, 1922, at eight o'clock A. M., in Book 103 of Mortgages, on page 302.

And Whereas, The said Charles Schwartz, the Mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained: and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Ten Thousand One Hundred Eighty-five ($10,185.00) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent per annum from the first day of March, 1923, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast Quarter (NE¼) of Section numbered Fourteen (14) in Township numbered One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range numbered Forty-three (43) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof, less one acre heretofore deeded for schoolhouse purposes, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the fifth day of May, 1923, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Ten Thousand One Hundred Eighty-five ($10,185.00) Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Lund left Monday night for a combined business and pleasure trip to Minneapolis. They expect to return home to-morrow.

Martin Olson came back Tuesday from Fosston where he had been working for Sollom & Moen. At present he is working for H. Peterson on the dray line.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson and children and Miss Gunhild Sollom went to Middle River Saturday evening and returned home Sunday evening accompanied by Miss Elevina Sollom who will visit here for awhile.

Chas. Horien came down from Strathcona Tuesday for a short visit with relatives and to attend the funeral of Chas. Hagglund. Mr. Horien was accompanied by his cousin, Miss Anna McManimon of Houston county, who will visit here at the home of her uncle, Ed. Horien and family.

Misses Albertina and Hilma Nyberg took their sister, Tillie, to the Warren hospital Saturday for treatment. Mrs. Nyberg went over to Warren Tuesday to see how her daughter was getting along and as it was not that necessary for Tillie to stay there longer she returned home Wednesday with her mother, tho she is still very poorly, we are sorry to report.

D. R. Jacob, Dentist of Greenbush, will make regular visits to Holt every two or three weeks. He will be in Holt Saturday April 28

He is bringing an excellent dental equipment with him and will be prepared to handle all dentistry in a very sanitary way.

Death of Charley Hagglund

Charley John Hagglund was born in Sweden, May 9, 1871, and died April 21st, 1923, aged 51 years, 11 months and 12 days. The cause of his death was diabetes and carbuncle.

Mr. Hagglund came to America with his parents at the age of 9 years, and they settled near St. Hilaire. In 1895 he was united in marriage with Miss Bertha Skiple of Polk county. After their marriage they lived at Saint Hilaire, Mentor, and Dugdale until 1913, when they moved to Holt. Four sons and three daughters were born to them: Oscar, Elmer, Mabel, Ida, Benny, Ruben and Orlene, all of whom were present at the funeral, except Elmer, who was unable to get here in time, as his home is at Grand Prairie in the western part of Canada.

The funeral services were held at the Holt Lutheran church Tuesday afternoon and the interment was made in the local cemetery.

Relatives present at the funeral from a distance were:

The deceased's aged mother, Mrs. Eva Hagglund, his brother, Ole Hagglund and family, all of St. Hilaire; a sister, Mrs. Chris Juhl of Faith, Minn. Mrs. Hagglund's brother and sister, Nels Skiple and Mrs. Peter Tufte, both from Grand Forks.

The News extends deepest sympathy to the bereaved widow, children and other relatives of the deceased.

O. P. Transtrom and family moved back to their old home in Arnegaard, N. Dak., yesterday.

Leo Horien has secured a job on the dredge with his team and has turned the school bus route over to H. Peterson

Continuous showers keep the fields so wet that it is liable to make it too late to seed much wheat. Maybe a shortage of wheat will raise the price.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Lund moved into the Bakke house last week. Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson expect to move into the Sollom house just vacated by Mr. Lund.

We learn from The Middle River Pioneer that Henry Wendt has traded his farm for a general store at Alpha, Minn. This is near the place where Mrs. Wendt's sister, Mrs. B. Docken, is at present living.

P. L. Anderson returned home Saturday from his trip to Duluth. While there he made short visits at homes of Carl Christoferson and Ernest Phillipson and found the former suffering from a bad attack of the rheumatism.

A speaker from the Northwest Agriculture School was here last week Thursday and spoke to a number of farmers on the successful raising of alfalfa, sweet clover, etc.

It is hoped that more of these meetings can be arranged for, in the near future.

A subscription paper was circulated among the men here last week to raise money to help Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien buy furniture so they could go to housekeeping again. The people gave very liberally, also a benefit dance was given, both together netting the nice sum of $120 00, which will materially help to overcome the loss they sustained by fire.

We have now installed a new outfit where you can get Malt and root beer for 5 cents a glass. Come and give it a trial. Holt Cafe,

—14—

"Want to spring him?" asked the detective with a grin.

Bartley nodded, and Black went away to arrange the matter. I could see what Bartley was after. Only the police and ourselves knew that the man was to be placed on the stand, and Bartley wanted to see what effect his sudden introduction might have on those present. There might be someone so surprised by it that he would give himself away.

In a row of chairs, directly in front of the coroner's desk and about six feet away, were seated the members of Slyke's household. Slyke's stepdaughter Ruth, dressed in dark blue, was between Miss Potter and an old man, who, I decided, was the minister uncle who had brought her home the night of the murder. I could not see Miss Potter's face, but her hands showed a great nervous strain; they were never still, picking incessantly at the folds of her dress. On her right were two empty chairs for the chauffeur and Roche, and beyond them the butler and the other servants.

We had to wait some time for the doctor, who had been delayed by a case. When he arrived, he pushed his way hurriedly through the people at the far end of the room, pausing only for a moment to speak to the district attorney. He took his place back of the desk, and, after removing some papers from his bag, stood for a moment looking over the crowd. He seemed almost too worn and nervous to preside.

A silence fell on the room, the curious, expectant silence that I have so often noticed at inquests. To most of the people present, the doctor had ceased to be their familiar friend and had become an impersonal officer of the law, the instrument for unraveling a mysterious death. Perhaps some were thinking of the man in whose house they were and whose dead body lay above awaiting burial. The silence was suddenly broken by a heavy peal of thunder.

To my surprise, the doctor called as his first witness Slyke's sister-in-law. As a rule, the first person called at an inquest is the one who discovered the body, but for some reason the doctor had decided to keep the butler for a later moment.

The first questions, after Miss Potter had taken the oath, were the usual ones. They related to her name and her relationship to Slyke. She said her name was Alice Potter, and that she was the sister of his dead wife. Slyke had asked her to come and run his house for him, and for the last ten years she had done so. In response to a question as to whether she had been paid for her services, she flushed deeply and explained that while no real salary had been paid, whenever she had needed money she had asked Slyke for it and he had given it to her. The sum varied, though she doubted if she had ever received more than a thousand in any one year. He always had been willing to give her as much as she asked for, and had not questioned the amounts. There had never been any trouble over money matters between them.

This was all evidence that I knew; and, while she was giving it, I glanced about the room, then watched the doctor. He was finding his position a very difficult one, as he was the family physician as well as the coroner. He put his questions with as much delicacy as possible. The whole affair seemed to be very distasteful to him. It was particularly trying for a man who was still feeling the effects of a nervous breakdown. Miss Potter, fortunately, became more at ease as the questioning proceeded. She kept her eyes down and gave her answers in such a low voice that at times it was hard to hear them at all.

All through the early part of Miss Potter's evidence there were rumbles of distant thunder. Leaning back in my chair, I pushed aside the heavy draperies that hid the window, and looked out. It was almost like night. A big storm was close at hand. The thunder was still some miles away, and I could see distant, almost continuous flashes of lightning. After a quick glance I let the curtain fall back into place.

When I turned my attention again to the evidence, Doctor King was questioning Miss Potter about the finding of the body. She testified that she was at breakfast when the butler rushed into the room, crying that something was wrong with Mr. Slyke. She knew her brother-in-law had intended to go fishing that morning, and was surprised to learn that he was not yet up. The butler had told her that he had called him, and receiving no reply had entered his room and found Mr. Slyke still in bed. When he did not answer when spoken to again, he (the butler) had come at once to her.

She stated that she had gone up at once to his room, the door of which had been left open by the butler when he rushed out. She had crossed to the bed and called him by name. When he did not answer, she looked closer and saw that he was dead. Her voice broke a little on this last statement, but she soon recovered and continued. The next thing she had done, she said, was to call the doctor.

For the first time, the district attorney took a hand in the proceedings.

"Tell us how you found him."

She answered that he was lying on his back, the bedclothes pulled up around his chin, and his hands by his side. She had not pulled the bedclothes down from the body, nor disturbed them in any way. It was not until she had noticed the wound in his head that she realized he had been shot.

"Did you disturb the body?" was the next question.

There was a long silence, then haltingly, "I—well, that is—I did close his eyes. Their expression frightened me, so—I—closed them."

She received a rather disgusted look from the district attorney, who asked, "Did you not know that the body should have been left as you found it."

"I—" she made an appealing gesture: "I never thought of that. Only of his eyes! They frightened me, they—stared so. I simply closed them. But I did nothing else."

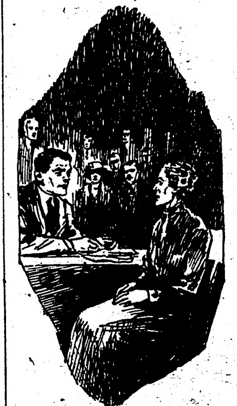
King then asked a question that surprised me. "You thought he had committed suicide?"

She hesitated, started to speak, stopped and at last found her voice. "Why, yes. That—that is—I did at the time. But I don't know what to think now."

"Why did you think he killed himself?"

This seemed a harder question to answer than the other.

"Why, I don't know. You see, he was shot; and I knew of no one who would want to kill him. As far as that goes, I know of no reason why he should have wanted to take his own life."



"Why Did You Think He Killed Himself?"

The next questions were along the line she had suggested by her answers. Could she not think of some reason why he might have committed suicide—ill health or money troubles? Had he quarreled with anyone lately? She seemed to have more difficulty with these last questions than with any of the previous ones. She was so long in answering that some of them had to be repeated several times. She was so careful of what she said that she gave me the impression that she was trying to keep something back.

In response to the first question, she repeated that she knew no reason why Slyke should want to commit suicide. She had heard of no money troubles, and his health was good. No, she had never heard of his having quarreled with anyone. It was this last answer that she had hesitated longer over than over any of the others, and it was the one which caused me to feel sure she was hiding something.

The question regarding the revolver that had been found in Slyke's hand she answered readily enough. He had kept it in his room, just where, she did not know; it was one that he had bought a year before.

When questioned as to her own doings on the night of his death, she could tell us nothing of value. There had been a card party, but she had gone to bed about ten o'clock and had not even heard the men go out. During the night she had heard no sound. As this was all she had to tell she left the stand. Though her testimony had thrown no light on what had taken place, I felt more strongly than ever that she could have done so had she wished. I glanced at Bartley, and the queer smile he gave me hinted that he, too, thought as I did.

The next witness was a Doctor Webster. I knew that a second physician had been called in on the morning of the crime, but had not met him. Doctor King's position was a peculiar one, as he was not only the physician who had first seen the body, but also the coroner. In order to have the testimony of a second medical man, he had sent Doctor Webster to examine the body and testify as to its condition. As the doctor took the seat near the coroner, I examined him closely. He was a man of at least sixty, rather stout, with a beaming, kindly face, and white beard that gave him the appearance of a practitioner of the old school.

In response to questions, he told how Doctor King had requested him to go to the house and examine the body, because, as coroner, King himself could not testify at the inquest. In terms more scientific than plain, he described how Slyke met his death, a death which, he said, must have been instantaneous, as the bullet had lodged in the brain.

"Doctor, do you think the wound could have been self-inflicted?" came the question.

The doctor paused, then answered thoughtfully, "That is very hard to answer. So far as the wound itself is concerned, it could have been self-inflicted. But other things that were brought to my attention cause me to believe that it could not have been so inflicted."

The room stiffened into attention. It was the first hint they had had that Slyke might have been murdered.

"Explain your answer. What do you mean by 'other things were brought to your attention'?"

The doctor replied slowly. "The facts I will mention were brought to my attention by Mr. John Bartley, the famous criminal investigator, whom I found at the house when I arrived."

At the mention of Bartley's name a little murmur of surprise went over the room. Half way down the room the reporters, for the first time, were writing hurriedly, and in a minute a telegraph boy went out with a mass of telegrams. Within an hour the fact that Bartley was working on the case would be in all the newspaper offices in New York.

The doctor continued: "Mr. Bartley aided me in making my examination of the body. The wound was, as I have said, one that a man could have easily inflicted upon himself, but such a wound causes death within a few seconds after it is made. I thought at first sight that it was suicide, but Mr. Bartley pointed out that the hands of the dead man, one of which held the revolver, were under the bedclothes and that they were pulled up smoothly around his neck. It would have been impossible for Mr. Slyke himself to have done that. I mean he could not have killed himself and then placed his arms under the clothes, after first pulling them up around his chin. He would not have had time before he died, had he fired the shot. As Mr. Bartley pointed out—and as I should have thought of for myself—in cases of violent death the eyes are open. Mr. Slyke's eyes were almost closed. How they were closed after death, Miss Potter has just told us."

Again there came a murmur of astonishment. The doctor's statement had been entirely unexpected by most of the audience. For the first time it was suggested that, instead of Slyke's having killed himself, he had been murdered. All awaited eagerly further developments.

"Then you would say that Mr. Slyke was murdered?" came the question.

The doctor's answer was a long time in coming.

"I hardly know what to say. What Mr. Bartley pointed out to me causes me to believe that Mr. Slyke was killed. Of course, there is a possibility that the wound might have been self-inflicted, and someone else arranged the bedclothes around his neck after he was dead."

He paused again, then continued, "That might have been done, but the chances are that he did not kill himself. I cannot positively state, however, whether it was suicide or murder."

His hesitation started a long argument between him, the coroner, and the district attorney. If Slyke had killed himself, then someone else must have pulled up the bedclothes and arranged the body. What had been the person's reason for doing it? If, on the other hand, he had been murdered, then a very definite attempt had been made to make it look like suicide. The revolver in the dead man's hand came under discussion, and Doctor Webster said that, though it could be placed in a person's hand after death, any trained eye could detect the fact. His evidence, while it had for the first time suggested that a murder might have been committed, had yet done little to clear up the mystery. I could see by the doubt and bewilderment in their faces that his uncertainty as to whether it was murder or suicide had communicated itself to the audience. They looked eagerly about for the next witness, wondering what his testimony would disclose. There was little enough, as I knew too well, that any witness could tell that would throw light on Slyke's death.

The coroner glanced at a piece of paper and said: "Will Mr. John Bartley kindly take the stand?"

PREDICT WHEAT ACREAGE CUT

Little Seeding Done in Eastern Half of State According to Reports.

FIELDS NOT IN SHAPE

Results of Late Seeding Will Be Decreased Acreage—Conditions Only Slightly Better in Western Counties.

Fargo, N. D.—There is almost certain to be a tremendous cut in the wheat acreage in eastern North Dakota, in the opinion of officials of the North Dakota Agricultural college and others who are in touch with the situation. It is reported that many farmers will not plant wheat after May 1.

Cass county farmers in Fargo report that very little wheat seeding has been done, and apparently this situation holds true throughout the whole eastern half of teh state. The fields are not in shape to seed, except in spots on the high ground.

Slope As An Offset.

Conditions are much better in the extreme western part of the state, it is reported, and it is expected that the cut in wheat acreage in eastern North Dakota will be somewhat offset by a normal acreage or even an increase in acreage in the Missouri slope country.

Every field of summer fallow, plowed land, and corn land is being put into wheat in the slope, it is reported.

Some of the college officials believe that if the weather allows seeding to become general by the close of the week, there will be a cut in wheat acreage in North Dakota of about 20 to 25 per cent, basing this prediction on the probability of a normal acreage in the slope district.

"With three or four days of good seeding weather a great deal of seed can be put in, with the equipment on the farms of North Dakota," said a college official, "and much wheat could be put in yet."

Many Diversifying.

"There will be a great increase in diversified farming in Cass county this year," says Wm. Guy, county agent. "There will be an especially heavy increase in alfalfa, flax, and sweet clover.

"More farmers are milking cows in Cass county now than ever before in the history of the county, and there is more corn, more hogs, more beef stock, and more of all kinds of diversified farming.

"There is a big demand for sheep, but breeding ewes are scarce, and many are being kept from going into sheep for that reason."

PEACE MEET RESUMES WORK

Grew Looking After American Interests at Parley.

Lausanne—Safeguarding of the legitimate national interests of the United States and of the principle of commercial opportunity for all nations was officially set forth as the guiding rule of the American representatives when the Near East peace conference resumed its labors in an endeavor to restore peace between the allied powers and Turkey, and between Greece and Turkey.

Joseph C. Grew, American minister, said the United States welcomed the resumption of the conference. It had reconvened on a substantial basis; an understanding had already been reached on a variety of important subjects, and upon this firm foundation the United States expected soon to see erected that edifice of a just and stable peace for which the world was waiting with eagerness. Of the position of the American representatives he said:

"We are here for the same purposes and in the same capacity as before the adjournment, participating not on the footing of a belligerent against Turkey nor as a party to the treaty of peace under negotiation between the allied powers and Turkey, but none the less in a fully representative capacity and with full authorization and competence to speak on behalf of the government of the United States."

No mention was made at the inaugural meeting with the Turks of the railroad or other concessions granted either to Americans or other foreigners, but the Chester concession continues to be the great topic of private discussion.

The Turkish delegation, through its spokesman, declared that the Chester concession was granted not because Chester was an American or Turkey wished to favor the United States, but because the Americans knew how to do business on a business basis without appealing to their government for help or seeking to exercise any "economic pressure" against Turkey.

Minneapolis Has Linseed Merger.

Minneapolis—Merger of the Archer-Daniels Linseed company and the Midland Linseed Products company of Minneapolis into a corporation with total assets exceeding $11,000,000 and which will control about 35 per cent of the linseed mill capacity of the United States, has become known here. The new corporation, known as the Archer-Daniels-Midland company, will take over the properties and business of the two concerns. The officers are expected to be the same as those of the Archer-Daniels company.

EXPECT CROWD AT CONFERENCE

Auditorium May Be Used For Meetings When Peteet Speaks in Fargo.

INTEREST INCREASING

Many Commercial Secretaries to Be Present—All Bankers Invited—Leaders Expect Definite Results from Meet.

Fargo, N. D.—Indications are that it may be necessary to use the Fargo Auditorium to handle the general sessions of the conference of farmers, bankers and Commercial club representatives who will be here April 30 and May 1 to meet with Walton Peteet of the American Farm Bureau federation.

Definite assurance that the amalgamation of the three grain marketing organizations of the Northwest has been officially ratified, and is now positively assured, as announced in a statement made at Minneapolis, has added greatly to the interest in the coming conference here, it is reported.

Definite Results Expected.

"It is believed that something very definite may be looked for in the way of co-operative grain marketing for this year's crop under this plan of united effort by the Equity Co-operative Exchange, the Grain Growers Sales Agency, and the Northwest Wheat Growers," said H. B. Fuller, secretary of the North Dakota Farm Bureau, which is arranging the conference.

"Responses are coming in which indicate that there will be a big attendance of representatives of commercial organizations," said W. P. Chesnut, secretary of the North Dakota Association of Commercial Secretaries. "We have had several letters which reported that not only were the secretaries coming in themselves, but that in most instances they would be accompanied by other members of their respective organizations.

W. C. Macfadden, secretary of the North Dakota Bankers' association, is preparing a letter which will be sent to every banker in the state early in the week, inviting them to attend the conference.

"I found a lot of interest in the coming conference in the southern part of the state, among farmers and bankers alike," said Mr. Fuller, who recently returned from a trip into Sargent and Dickey counties.

"If there is an actual attendance as indicated, it may be necessary to use the Auditorium, instead of the assembly rooms at the Commercial club, as we had first planned.

"We have not made definite detailed arrangements for all the conference sessions, but the general plan will be to have a general session at 2 p. m. Monday, which will be addressed by Mr. Peteet. There will be group conferences Monday forenoon and also Monday evening and Tuesday."

BOY FINDS STOLEN BONDS

Fruit Jar Found in Alley Contains $19,275 in Bonds.

Minneapolis—A dirty fruit jar found in an alley by a small boy who broke it and gave the "pretty colored paper" to his playmates, contained $19,275 in bonds stolen from the Bank of Maiden Rock, Maiden Rock, Wis., on January 11 last, secret service men and police announced.

The jar was found by Raymond Knutson, 7 years old, lying between a sleigh and a garage. How long the bonds had been concealed in their unique hiding place and by whom they were placed there, probably never will be known.

Distributed "Pretty Paper."

Young Knutson was playing ball with several other youths when he found the jar. He broke the glass container and when the roll of bonds fell out he distributed it among the youngsters. He did not keep any for himself.

One of the boy, Irving Speigal, 12, got $7,625 worth of bonds. In true pirate style, he buried his "loot" in a vacant lot. Later he dug it up, took it down town to the First National bank, and offered to sell it. Bank officials called detectives and secret service men.

Speigal Tells It All.

They questioned Speigal and learned the names of the other boys. The rest of the bonds were soon recovered. One boy had $11,000 worth.

C. D. Brown of the Minnesota Bankers' association protective department, declared that Gene Saunders, who was arrested at Davenport, Iowa, in connection with the Toledo robbery, admitted that he was the leader of the Maiden Rock bank robbery gang.

Village Has Million Dollar Fire.

Bluefield, W. Va.—The pick and shovel was discarded for the hammer and saw by scores of miners of Burke, a mining village in McDowell county, which was converted into a huge ash heap by flames with an estimated property damage of $1,000,000. More than 1,000 persons were rendered homeless by the fire which destroyed 100 buildings. Authorities said it would be only a few days until the village was rebuilt. The fire was believed to have been caused by a defective flue.

Backache Is a Warning!
Those agonizing twinges across the small of the back, that dull, throbbing backache may mean serious kidney weakness—serious if neglected, for it may lead to gravel, stone in the kidneys, bladder inflammation, dropsy or fatal Bright's disease. If you are suffering with a bad back, have dizzy spells, headaches, nervous, despondent attacks or disordered kidney action, heed Nature's warning. Get after the cause. Doan's Kidney Pills have helped thousands. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

MOTHER OF LARGE FAMILY

Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Other Mothers

Windom, Minn.—"I was so run-down that I was just good for nothing. I was to become the mother of my ninth child, and I thought I did not have the strength to go through with it. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has surely done all I could ask it to do and I am telling all my friends about it. I have a nice big baby girl and am feeling fine. You may use this letter to help other sick mothers."—Mrs. C. A. Moede, Box 634, Windom, Minn.

My First Child

Glen Allen, Alabama.—"I have been greatly benefited by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for bearing-down feelings and pains. I was troubled in this way for nearly four years following the birth of my first child, and at times could hardly stand on my feet. A neighbor recommended the Vegetable Compound to me after I had taken doctor's medicines without much benefit. It has relieved my pains and gives me strength. I recommend it and give you permission to use my testimonial letter."—Mrs. Ida Rye, Glen Allen, Alabama.

Laxatives Replaced By the Use of Nujol
Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication. Try it today.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Sleepy Eye—A lively contest is on between two teams of the Benjamine A. Rememle post of the American Legion and it is expected at least 150 members will be added to the post rolls as a result of the drive.

Little Falls—Explorations have been commenced by the Little Falls Water Power company at Blanchard Rapids, eight miles south of Little Falls, to ascertain the advisability of building a power dam there.

Faribault—Ray G. Moonan of Waseca, formerly commander of the local post of the American Legion, has been appointed as general chairman in charge of arrangements for the state convention of the legion to be conducted here Aug. 13, 14 and 15.

Albert Lea—The officers of the National Creamery Buttermaker's association will conduct a conference in Albert Lea. The officers will meet here as an executive committee and will formulate the program for their annual convention which meets at Madison, Wis., in November.

Mankato—When Indian lake was drained to a point where the water would not longer cover them, thousands of mud turtles took refuge on a line of tiling which had been laid to carry off the remaining water in the lake.

Ely—More than 20 fire guards will be given preliminary training and instruction by the United States forest service at Ely and Grand Marais, before they go into the Superior National forest to begin their summer work.

Sleepy Eye—The annual conference of the Evangelical church will be at Sleepy Eye from April 30 to May 6. The conference is divided into three districts, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Mankato and has a membership of more than 8,000.

Ortonville—A five-ton, 500 gallon a minute, four wheel drive fire truck with the most modern fire fighting appliances, was authorized for purchase at a meeting of the city council here. The purchase price is $8,500 with delivery set for July 15.

Austin—Among the heaviest payments of federal and state inheritance taxes ever made in Mower county were those on the estates of John and Sybella Wagner, who were murdered by their son-in-law, August Detloff, at Grand Meadow, last July. The property of the Wagner couple is valued at $141,993.32, on which the state tax was $1,780.78, and the federal tax $1,152.76.

New Ulm—The final debate under the auspices of the State Debating league, to determine the state championship, will be conducted in Turner hall, New Ulm, the night of Thursday, May 3. The New Ulm team, composed of Howard Vogel, Elizabeth Hintz and Clarence Rellof, will meet the Cass Lake team to determine state honors.

Red Wing—The uniting of the Trinity and St. Peter's churches of Red Wing will not take place, according to action taken by separate meetings of the two congregations. At the St. Peter's church meeting, the motion to unite the churches now was voted down 71 to 56, although at the Trinity church meeting a resolution was passed, almost unanimously favoring union.

Crookston—The Kiewel Products company, of this city, has entered into a contract with a New York firm whereby the concern has agreed to deliver 500,000 pounds of a certain grade of buter between now and Nov. 1 of this year. Not only is this the largest deal in butter ever consummated in this part of the state, but the specifications also call for a uniform product of a grade somewhat above the ordinary.

Windom—Windom's municipal election tangle was straightened out when Judge Nelson of the district court heard evidence in the case at a special term of court. At the recent election the judges in one ward failed to count votes for P. J. Gillam for councilman where electors had written Gillam's name on the ballots and had failed to place a cross after the name. Alderman Elness was accordingly declared re-elected.

Hibbing—That Hibbing is at the threshhold of a period of unprecedented prosperity was the conclusion reached by observers in the "North Forty" vacation suit as the result of testimony given by M. H. Godfery, general manger of the Oliver Mining company. "From the gigantic open pit flanking North Hibing on the north, east and west will come 10,000,000 tons of iron ore this year," Mr. Godfrey testified. This will mean an increase of approximately 4,000,000 tons over that of previous years.

Le Sueur Center—In an effort to have the name of this village changed, to avoid confusion with the city of Le Sueur, the Le Sueur Center Leader-Democrat has offered a cash prize of $100 to the person who suggests the name which is finally adopted by the voters of the village.

Ortonville—Ice in Big Stone lake is loosening and is expected to go out at any time now. Preparations have been made to prevent an ice jam at the mouth of the lake, where the Minnesota river takes its start. This is the latest that ice has been solid in the lake for a number of years.

Pipestone—The board of county commissioners at a special meeting appropriated $1,500 for the support of the county agent's office.

Lancaster—Falling against a circular saw as he slipped while sawing wood, Carl Johnson of Caribou suffered the loss of his right forearm.

Duluth—About 670 members of the teaching staffs of Duluth schools are to participate in a proposed increase amounting to $19,000 for the coming year in wages.

Rochester—The Rochester Civic association is the name adopted by the new organization which replaces all organizations heretofore promoting civic work here. The activities of the Kiwanis and other similar clubs are to be centered herafter in the new organization.

Moorhead—Moorhead has the finest fire department of any city of its size, George B. Gray, president of the Minnesota Fire Prevention association, said in an address before the Moorhead Kiwanis club.

St. James—Decision to buy a pipe organ costing $4,000 for the St. James Norwegian Lutheran church was made at the quarterly meeting of church officials.

Duluth—William Broadbridge was allowed all that he asked and interest in his fire suit against the United States railroad administration in a verdict returned here by a district court jury. The verdict was for $3,848.80.

Duluth—Fire destroyed all but one of the Clouly and Traverse pulpwood buildings, located on Lighthouse Point.

Truman—For the first time in the history of the village a woman seeks the office of postmistress of Truman. She is Miss Florence Ross.

Mankato—Mrs. N. H. Olson, aged 32, wife of a prominent banker of St. Peter, Minn., died in a hospital here from heart disease.

Hibbing—Edward Olson, 11 year old son of Ole B. Olson, living on South Sturgeon lake, three miles from Green Rock, was killed when a 12 gage shotgun accidentally exploded in the hands of a playmate.

Duluth—Rev. O. J. Flagstad, who recently resigned his pastorate of Trinity Lutheran church, will leave with his family for Newman Grove, Nebraska, where he has accepted a pastorate.

Waseca—A petition is being circulated here with a request that the district court order a new election for mayor, on the ground that George H. Goodspeed was illegally elected on April 2.

St. Cloud—Half a million dollars is to be expended by the Great Northern railroad in increasing the capacity of its shops, the intent being to make this point one of the greatest terminals on the entire system.

Dodge Center—Farm boys in this vicinity are entering in a contest sponsored by the Harmony Farmers' club, which will offer prizes for the biggest corn crops raised by Dodge county boys.

Rochester—Julius Ansen, county agent of Todd county, has been obtained as boys' and girls' club leader for Olmstead county. Mr. Ansen will take up his work in Olmsted county on or before May 1. Geo. F. Howard, assistant state boys' and girls' club leader, will remain in charge of the work until Mr. Ansen arrives.

Little Falls—Explorations have been commenced by the Little Falls Water Power company at Blanchard Rapids, eight miles south of Little Falls, to ascertain the advisability of building a power dam there. Drillings are being made by the Long Year Exploration company of Minneapolis.

St. Cloud—Plans for marketing the 1923 potato crop were discussed at a meeting of the St. Cloud Potato Growers' association. Dan A. Wallace and A. M. Dunton, who are organizing co-operative potato selling associations, spoke.

Ely—Five hundred men will be employed on the power transmission line between Ely and Virginia this summer, located in five or six camps, according to William Kennedy, foreman for the Phoenix Utility company. The transmission line will carry current from their hydro-electric plant at Fall Lake to Virginia, Eveleth, Ely and several other towns.

Veteransville—This farm community of disabled veterans of the World war claims the honor of being the first community in Minnesota to get in line in the statewide campaign for pure bred cattle. The veterans have just purchased a pure bred Guernsey bull from Long Prairie. Every man in the community is specilizing in Guernseys and they are amibitious to make Veteransville one of the largest Guernsey centers in America.

Stillwater—With rousing meetings attended by bankers, breeders, business men and farmers from all over the surrounding country the Washington county pure bred sire campaign was opened by its promoters, the Minnesota Holstein Breeders' association. Governor Preus, Dean Walter C. Coffey, of the Minnesota College of Agriculture, Robert Geiger, secretary of the breedrs' association, addressed a meeting at the Stillwater auditorium.

Owatonna—The contract for this city's new water plant at a cost of $20,375, was awarded to the Pittsburgh-Des Moines company, of Des Moines, Iowa.

Mantorville—School board members of Dodge Center were held responsible for an accident which occurred on the school grounds in 1921 when a little girl was killed, a jury in district court here decided. In 1916, the school board allowed certain playground equipment to be placed on the grounds for use by members of a Sunday school class in Dodge Center.

Portland Citizen Declares Tanlac Completely Overcame Stomach Troubles.

J. P. Strahl, 6517 88th St., Portland, Oregon, speaking of his experience with Tanlac, says:

"Tanlac has ended my stomach trouble, built me up eighteen pounds and I now enjoy the best health of my life. But for two years before I got Tanlac, stomach trouble had me in its grip, and all sorts of ailments kept bobbing up to cause me misery. Scarcely anything I ate agreed with me, and I kept falling off till I was sixteen pounds underweight. Gas on my stomach bloated me till I could hardly breathe. I had attacks of biliousness and had to be all the time taking laxatives.

"Tanlac put me on my feet, fixed me up so I can eat heartily, sleep like a top and work at full speed. There's no two ways about it: Tanlac sure builds a solid foundation for health."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

RESCUED LADY IN DISTRESS

Indianapolis Citizen Probably Wondered Later Just Why He Obeyed Order to "Beat It."

One night several weeks ago a nonfrivolous citizen, in his quite proper sedan, was driving sedately along on his homeward way. The shades of night had fallen. No air of mystery pervaded the city, and all was well.

Bangety-bang-bangety began the hood over his engine. Something was coming loose. He drew up to the curb and opened the door to get out to see about the thing.

He opened the door to get out. He didn't get out because—a woman tore open the rear door of the car on the opposite side and sprang into the back seat, whacked him on the shoulder, and cried:

"Beat it, honey, beat it, they're raidin' me again!"

A few minutes later, about twenty blocks away, an automobile with a loose hood rattled up to the curb. It contained a man in the front seat and a woman in the rear seat. The man was heard to say to the woman:

"Now you beat it—and get out of here!"—Indianapolis Star.

Modern Girl Made That Clear by Her Outspoken Opinion Concerning Well-Meaning Parents.

"Did you tell her that she could not go to that party?"

"I did."

"Did you explain to her that we considered it not a fit place for our daughter to be seen?"

"Yes."

"You know it is not enough merely to deny a young person's request. You should always explain your reasons. I trust you told her of the dangers of a promiscuous gathering?"

"I did."

"And warned her of the folly of late hours; the hurt of gossiping tongues; in short you did your best to make her see that it is for her welfare that we are denying this seeming bit of pleasure?"

"I did all that."

"And is she now satisfied to forego this needless amusement and remain contentedly at home with us?"

"She is not."

"What does she say?"

What to Eat and Why
Making a Big Word an Easy Part of Your Diet
Car-bo-hy-drates make up about 60 per cent of the average diet. They produce heat and energy. They are largely secured from the grain and vegetable starches.
In the long, slow baking by which Grape-Nuts is produced from wheat and malted barley, the grain starches are partially pre-digested. They are changed to "dextrins" and "maltose"—forms of Carbohydrates so easy to digest that they form the basis of the most successful baby foods.
Many people have digestive trouble caused by the food-starch in its original form, but Grape-Nuts has been famous for a quarter-century for its exceptional ease of digestion, and assimilation, and its splendid, building nourishment. It is a food for strength and energy, delightfully crisp and appetizing, made today by the same formula which first brought this charm for taste and aid to health to the world's dining table. Grape-Nuts contains the iron, phosphorus and the essential vitamin, so often lacking in modern, "refined" foods.
Many servings of real food value in a package of this economical food. At your grocer's today—ready to serve with cream or milk. Grape-Nuts—the Body Builder. "There's a Reason." Made by Postum Cereal Co., Inc., Battle Creek, Mich.

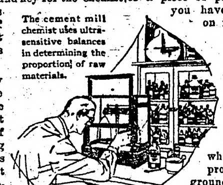
CHEMIST THE "CZAR" OF CEMENT MANUFACTURE

High and uniform quality results from his rigid tests and orders

Every eight seconds, mechanical devices dip into the materials that are traveling through a cement mill and put a sample under lock and key for the chemist to test. Chemists are "the czars" of a cement plant and chemistry is their law.

Few factory processes require more care than the making of cement — thousands of test samples being taken in a day's run at a cement plant because cement must be tested in a variety of ways for numerous qualities. It is under the chemist's instructions that workmen proportion the raw materials.

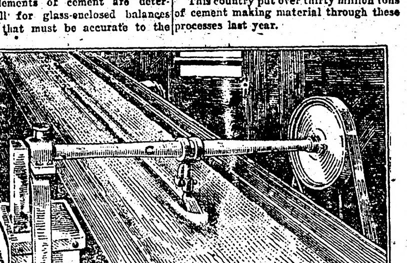
These tests in which the proportions of the elements of cement are determined call for glass-enclosed balances or scales that must be accurate to the ten-thousandth of a gram. There are 454 grams to a pound. Such balances will quickly detect the difference in weight of a piece of paper, before and after you have written your name on it.



The cement mill chemist uses ultra-sensitive balances in determining the proportion of raw materials.

The "rule" of the chemist is seen and felt at every point in the process of cement manufacture—in the quarry or pit where raw materials are obtained—in the departments where raw materials are proportioned, mixed and ground—in the burning department where under intense heat the chemical change takes place—in the department where the raw material which has now become clinker is ground to the fine powder called portland cement.

This country put over thirty million tons of cement making material through these processes last year.



This device takes a test sample for the chemist every 8 seconds. "B" is the cement on a moving belt, leaving the grinding mills. "C" is a revolving hollow shaft. As the dipper picks up a bit of the flour-like material it is carried through the shaft "C" and deposited in the locked box "A".

A baby clinic will be held here May 23rd.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Stanislaw Kubinski and Anna Kubinski, his wife, Mortgagors, to Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, bearing date the 15th day of September, 1921, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, 1921, at 8 A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 507,

And whereas, the said Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, has duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions thereof, and whereas there is due at the date of this notice upon said Mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $6,828.00, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the Mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lot Three (3), Southeast quarter (SE¼) of Northwest quarter (NW¼), and East half (E½) of Southwest quarter (SW¼) of Section Four (4), in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty (40) West, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front Door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 5th day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $6,828.00, and interest and taxes, if any, on said premises, and attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

WOMAN SICK TWO YEARS

Caused by Troubles Women Often Have—Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Medina, New York.—"I had a great deal of trouble such as women often have, and this affected my nerves. For over two years I suffered this way, then I read in the 'Buffalo Times' about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and have taken it with very good results. I am very much better and feel justified in praising the Vegetable Compound to my friends and neighbors who suffer from anything of the kind."—Mrs. WM. H. ADKINS, 311 Erin Road, Medina, N. Y.

CITY HAS CHANGED LITTLE

Modern Bagdad Remains Much as It Was in the Days of Harun-al-Rashid.

Many a school child who has read the "Arabian Nights' Entertainment," and can relate the nocturnal adventures of Harun-al-Rashid in ancient Bagdad, never heard of the star worshipers of the present-day kingdom of Irak, in the traditional land of Eden and Ararat. And yet these strange people are just as picturesque. They turn to the north star to pray, must be baptized every Sunday, and have a sacred book which they can begin at either end and read toward the middle.

Modern Bagdad differs little from old Bagdad. Here one must become accustomed to interminable mud walls more monotonous than any standardized rows of houses, narrow and mainly deserted thoroughfares, dogs always underfoot, and only moon and starlight to guide the way at night.

If you have to use a hammer—build something.

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

St. Cloud—Librarians and members of library boards of about fifteen cities and towns in central Minnesota will meet here May 11 and 12 in annual convention.

Brainerd—A fire believed to have been started when two boys lighted a match to examine the gas tank of a car, destroyed the Barorws Manufacturing company building at Barrows.

Little Falls—The Sylvester-Nichols Co., wholesale candy manufacturers, will move its entire plant from Little Falls to St. Cloud soon, it was announced by Charles Sylvester, president.

Winona—Election of Harry J. Satka as city treasurer, contested by W. A. Hargesheimer, defeated candidate, was formally acknowledged when Hargesheimer dismissed the contest in district court.

Duluth—Duluth posts of the American Legion this year again will award the legion medal to the senior student in each high school of the city with the best scholastic and athletic record in his respective class.

Rochester—Education and patriotism will be the themes of the discussions to be held during the convention of the First District Federation of Women's clubs with Americanism as the keynote. The sesisons will be open to the public.

Red Wing—A full grown grey timber wolf was trapped and then shot within the city limits of Red Wing and the city clerk has been called on to prepare bounty papers for the first time in years.

Austin—An eagle bent on having a chicken dinner made its fatal mistake when it returned the third time to the henyard of H. W. Heimer, a farmer living near Austin. The big bird was shot on its third trip.

Duluth—Victor L. Power, mayor of Hibbing, who recently was given a verdict of $1 in a suit against the Fitger Brewing company in behalf of John Scalcucci, has been awarded $24 more and the outstanding judgment against the company has been recorded as satisfied.

Owatanna—The village of Geneva and the town of Alden will have special elections to vote on the issue of school bonds for the building of consolidated schools in the two districts. Geneva is to vote on an issue of $35,000 while Alden will vote on an issue of $75,000.

Redwood Falls—In a contest of students in the commercial departments of the high school of Marshall, Lake Benton, New Ulm, Tracy, Springfield and Redwood Falls conducted here, Clifford Reynolds of Redwood Falls won first honors for typist beginner.

Barnum—Oren C. Gregg, near-octogenaran pioneer and known as the father of Minnesota Farmers' Institutes, has elected to spend his declining years in the cut-over country of northern Minnesota. He will manage a farm near Barnum and live again some of the experiences of the early days.

Trosky—A package containing several thousand dollars worth of valuable securities which were taken from the safe of the Ewoldt & Griffin Lumber Co. office here when robbers visited the place and blew open the safe two weeks ago was found in Iowa according to information received here.

Fergus Falls—E. V. Arrowwood, who has obtained a number of leases for oil in the neighborhood of Foxhome, 15 imles west of this city, states that his company is sending a drill to that neighborhood and that a shaft will be put down in a short time to determine whether or not there is oil there. Geologists, who have visited this region lately, report that there is every indication of oil.

Hallock—The first of a series of meetings for the purpose of organizing a co-operative wool pool for the marketing of the 1923 clip of wool in Minnesota was conducted here. The meeting was conducted under the auspices of the New Wool Marketing association, co-operating with the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation and the state department of agriculture.

Fergus Falls—Fergus Falls is going to be the convention center of western Minnesota the coming summer. In addition to the convention of the State Game and Fish Protective league, which will take place June 25, 26, 27 and 28, there will be at least seven Norwegian lagets in the same month. Schedules for these lagets or conventions arranged up to the present time are as follows: June 5, 6 and 7, meeting of the Ringeriksiaget. June 8, 9 and 10, Landingslaget. June 14 and 15, Sigdagslaget. June 24, festival of the Sons of Norway for this district. The Solarlagets and the Osterdalslaget will conduct conventions in this city.

Northfield—More than 300 women, many of them from Minneapolis, will take part in the Carleton colege May fete, "A Carnival of Venice," to be given here May 19. The fete will be held at the Lyman Memorial lakes.

Winona—Miss Etta Christensen, director of rural education at the Winona Teachers college, after escaping virtually unhurt when her automobile plunged over a 40 foot embankment between this city and La Crosse, walked to the nearest village and hired a garage man to take her to La Crosse, where she acted as one of the judges in a high school declamation

Wheaton—John E. Pearson, superintendent of schools at Halton, N. D., has been elected superintendent of the Wheaton schools.

Rochester—To aid in the campaign against the fly in Rochester, the city health department is offering a prize of $5 to the boy who will invent the best flytrap for household purposes.

Crookston—The Northwest Minnesota fair will be conducted in Crookston July 23 to 27 it was announced at a meeting of the board of directors.

Willmar—The state asylum at Willmar has been granted $437,300 by the legislature and the place will be further improved during the summer.

Slayton—A special board election will be conducted here on the question of issuing bonds in the amount of $125,000 for a new high school.

Owatonna—Many rural schools having the eight months' term will close for the season and will not reopen until fall. The districts having the five and six months' terms already have closed.

St. Cloud—Robert Calhoun, former St. Cloud boy, now professor of psychology and philosophy at Carleton college, Northfield, has accepted a chair in the Divinity college at Yale for the coming year.

Virginia—Douglas Greely, aged 63, president of the State Bank of Virginia, is dead here after a prolonged illness. He came to Virginia in 1910 from Pine City, Minn., and opened the State Bank of Virginia.

Austin—Dr. Raymond C. Swisher, pastor of the First Congregational church for four years, has resigned, and after June 1 will be pastor of the First Congregational church at York, Nebr.

Janesville—The Women's club of Janesville will entertain the Women's club of Waseca county at a luncheon. At this meeting officers will be elected as well as delegates to the district convention at Rochester.

Crosby—A speeding automobile, while rounding a curve near Trommald, north of here, struck a team belonging to Edward Christenson and driven by Harry Peterson. The driver was badly cut about the head.

Duluth—Carrying supplies for the settlers, fishermen, woodsmen and villagers along the isolated north shore of Lake Superior, the U. S. S. America steamed out of the local harbor. It was the first scheduled trip of the season from the Head of the Lakes.

Rochester—John M. Rowley, one of the leading Masons of the state, was buried here with full Masonic honors. Prominent members of the order were present from all over the northwest, and the funeral was one of the largest ever conducted in Rochester.

St. Paul—Delegates from all parts of the state will be present when the annual convention of the Minnesota State Osteopathic association assembles at the Saint Paul hotel, Dr. S. D. Foster, St. Paul, chairman of the committee on activities, announced.

Fairmont—At its first meeting the new city council appointed he following officers: City clerk, W. R. Surgeon; city attorney, Frank Dougherty; assessor, William Viesselman. The latter is to work only two months in the year, at $300 a month.

Rochester—To obtain a representative civic organization, business men and business women have been divided into 14 groups in a drive to obtain memberships at $25 each in the new Civic association, which supplants the Civic and Commerce association and the Kiwanis club.

Owatonna—Representatives of the Minnesota conference of the Evangelical church appeared in district court here and petitioned Judge F. W. Senn for permission to transfer the property of the Emmanuel church society of Meriden to the state body.

Duluth—Determined to make 1923 a record year from the standpoint of the low number of forest fires, state and national forestry men in northern Minnesota and in the vicinity of the head of the lakes expect to make the best of the National Forestry week to further their program of preventing and suppressing forest fires.

Mankato—Ray Pool, St. Paul, accused of breaking into a postal substation in St. Paul, pleaded guilty to the charge in United States district court before Judge Wilbur F. Booth here and was sentenced to two years in Leavenworth prison. George Warmington and William Davis were sentenced to five years in Leavenworth on a charge of robbing a custodian of the mails at Northfield, Minn.

Owatonna—Announcement was made from the county superintendent of school's office that the rural spelling contest will be conducted in the high school here. One pupil from each rural school in the county will compete, and the winners in the oral and written examinations will be given a free trip to the State Fair next fall.

Jasper—Three bloodhounds were used ineffectively in an effort to locate robbers who entered the A. L. Roevold drug store here and escaped with a large amount of merchandise. The dogs followed a roundabout course through town to the stockyards, where they stopped. It is believed that the robbers had an automobile parked at the stockyards.

Waseca—Twenty-three members of the public schools' teaching staff have signed contracts for the coming year, and these contracts have been accepted by the local board of education.

Ortonville—Fifty bankers and real estate men of Big Stone county, at a meeting here, started a state-wide campaign to induce new settlers to come to Minnesota, by organizing a county realty association. The sum of $2,000 was raised for advertising the state of Minnesota, and the attractions it offers to settlers. The meeting was the first of a series to be held in many Minnesota counties.

PRICE FIXING CHARGED

Charge Members of Association With Maintaining Artificial High Level of Prices—Resembles "Pittsburg Plus" System for Steel.

St. Paul, Minn.—Under provisions of the Sherman anti-trust law, injunction proceedings against the Western Pine Manufacturers' association and others to halt an alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade were filed in the United States district court here at the direction of Attorney General H. M. Daugherty.

The Weyerhaeuser interests and a number of other Minnesota companies are named by the government as parties to a conspiracy for the elimination of competition in the lumber industry and the keeping up of prices without regard to natural economic laws.

Price Fixing Charged.

It is alleged in the petition that members of the Pine Manufacturers association and others affiliated with them have maintained an artificial high level of prices for their products by means of agreements on price lists, concerted curtailment of production, and other illegal practices.

Among the large number of defendants are five whose addresses are given as St. Paul. They are:

F. E. and C. A. Weyerhaeuser; J. W. Mahan of the Bonners Ferry Lumber company; H. G. Richardson of the Humbird Lumber company; and James T. Maher of the Somers Lumber company. John P. Weyerhaeuser of Tacoma, Wash., and the Weyerhaeuser Sales company of Spokane, Wash., are also defendants.

Investigated Since 1920.

It is disclosed in the complaint that the government had been conducting an investigation of the alleged lumber trust since the spring of 1920.

A practice akin to the "Pittsburgh plus" of the steel industry is charged to the lumber group, it being set forth that the associated lumbermen established basic price lists by figuring freight rates as from Spokane. These rates were estimated on an assumed weight per thousand feet of lumber that in many cases was considerably higher than the actual weights, the government charges.

Federal Judge Wilbur F. Booth probably will hear the petition, it is said.

SUGAR HEARING ADJOURNED

Hearing on Sugar Speculations to Be Held May 7.

New York—Hearing of the government's application for a temporary injunction to restrain raw sugar futures trading on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange was adjourned until May 7 after the government had presented arguments to sustain its petition and filed a mass of documents and affidavits.

The exchange, its clearing association, and 23 past and present officers and members who have been subpoenaed, took no action in the proceedings except to file an answer to the government petition denying the charge that the transactions on the exchange constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Assistant Attorney General and Special Assistant J. T. Fowler, in presenting the government' asces, asserted that since February 7, an orgy of speculation has been indulged in through the instrumentality of the exchange and its clearing association, and that enormous quantities of raw sugar, more than the total stocks in existence, have been the subject of fictitious or paper sales.

The result, they said, was that the price of raw and refined sugars had been increased more than two cents a pound to the consumers.

CREAMERY ROBBERS HELD

St. Paul, Minn.—Carl A. Braunig, secretary of a local baking company, was arrested charged with receiving stolen property, the sixth arrest in an investigation of an organization which is alleged to have made a business of looting creameries in small towns in Minnesota and Wisconsin during the past six months.

Warrants will be issued for other persons alleged to be involved, it was said at the county attorney's office. Officers of creamery organizations throughout the state and the Twin City Milk Producers association are aiding in the probe.

Dynamite Bomb Wrecks Home.

Paducah, Ky.—Mrs. Rosetta Daugherty Warren, 34, was instantly killed in a dynamite explosion which wrecked her home here. Her three children, Christine, 8, Aline, 10, and Eugene, 15, escaped injury. A woman is believed to have planted the explosive. Authorities attribute insane jealousy as the cause. The charge was placed at the corner of the front room directly under the bed on which Mrs. Warren slept. The three children, who were asleep in an adjoining room, escaped death.

Funeral Customs Alike.

The discovery of human hair in the tomb of Tutankhamen suggests a parallel between Korean and Egyptian funeral customs. The Korean, when he buries his ancestor, places with him in the grave not only the precious porcelain vessels from which he ate and drank, but also all the nail parings and hair combings of his life. Similar customs are said to exist in many other countries. Probably the custom is due to the widespread superstition that in order to bewitch a person it is necessary to have some part of his body, such as hair or nail, and that these remnants are buried so that he may not fall into the hands of an enemy of the dead man. —Detroit News.

CHAPTER IX

—15—

The Cry in the Dark.

There was a little stir of excitement as Bartley, with easy grace, arose and took his seat in the witness chair. Every one was eager to see him, and he became at once the center of all eyes.

Doctor King did not trouble Bartley with questions, but allowed him to tell his story in his own way. He recounted our arrival at the house and our examination of the body. As he told of his reasons for thinking that Slyke had been murdered, the room became very still. He described our search for clues in the tower rooms, and what he had found on the balcony. Slowly the audience realized that Slyke had not been killed in any of the rooms of the house, but on a tower sixty feet in the air.

He pictured in short, concise words how the body had been carried down two flights of stairs, undressed and put into bed. A gasp went around the room at his words, and I could see from the faces of the listeners that they could scarcely believe the story he was telling them. The sensation was increased when he spoke of the removal of the revolver from the dead man's hand while we were in the upper room of the tower. This was, without doubt, so far the most dramatic moment of the inquest.

While Bartley had been giving his testimony, the storm had come nearer. A thunderstorm is never a cheerful thing at the best, and this one was making every one very uneasy. At each clap of thunder, someone would give a start and glance nervously around.

The next witness, the photographer, was only on the stand a short time. He told of taking the pictures of the room in which the body lay and of the body itself, and stated that he had seen no revolver in the dead man's hand.

The testimony of the following witness was also brief. The boy who worked around the garage, although very much frightened, stuck to his story that he was getting into bed when he heard a shot, and that it sounded as if it were up in the air. The time, he thought, was somewhere between two and three in the morning.

When he had returned to his seat the step-daughter took his place. Her youthful face flushed under the many eyes that were turned upon her, and she never looked up. Her story was the one that she had told to Bartley and she added nothing new to it. In answer to a question as to whether she had glanced at her step-father's door when she passed it the night of the murder, she replied that she had and that it was closed. Catching the district attorney's eye at this point, Bartley motioned him to his side and they whispered together for a moment. The district attorney then asked the girl if she had seen the dog when she came in. Rather surprised at the question, she answered that the dog had met her at the front door, smelled of her dress, and followed her to the stairway before going back to his rug. When she left the stand, her testimony had not added anything to what we already knew.

I realized suddenly that we knew no more about the crime than we had when the inquest began. Though I was sure in my own mind that Slyke had been murdered, I had grave doubts if it could be proved satisfactorily to others. The almost entire absence of clues made it seem more mysterious than it had at first, if that were possible. Even the next witness, Mr. Lawrence, added nothing to our knowledge. He said that, at the close of the party, Mr. Slyke had asked him to stay behind, for what he did not know at the time. After the others had left, Mr. Slyke had taken him up to his room in the tower, and had asked him if he would like to buy a little whisky, as he had more than he needed.

There was a ripple of laughter at this unexpected statement. Though it was the first time that whisky had been introduced into the case, I doubt if anyone regarded its mention as important. The laughter made Lawrence more nervous than ever, and he talked faster and more indistinctly. He had stayed only a few moments, he said, though Slyke had urged him to remain longer. A moment after he had been released from the stand, I remembered that he had not mentioned the fact that Slyke had told him he was expecting another visitor. Whether Lawrence had forgotten it or did not wish to volunteer the information, I could not decide. It seemed to me to be a very important point for him to have omitted.

The butler, who came next, took his seat to the accompaniment of one of the worst claps of thunder that we had yet had, a clap that seemed almost in the room. Then a burst of rain swept against the windows. All through his testimony the thunder made it almost impossible to hear him, and he had to repeat many of his statements. He appeared to be a silent man, who seldom spoke of his own volition. He had little to tell as and disposed of the card party in a few words. After it had broken up and he had let Mr. Lawrence out, he had locked the windows but left the front door unfastened, as Mr. Slyke had told him that he, himself, would attend to it later. In answer to a question as to whether he had seen Slyke after Lawrence left, he replied that he had not. In fact, he had not seen him again alive. He had gone to his room, leaving the dog in the living room, as was the custom. His first knowledge that Slyke was dead came when he entered his room with Miss Potter.

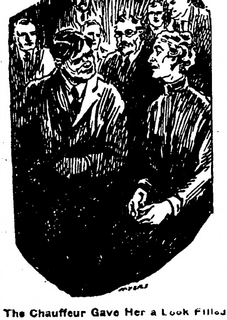
So far, like all the other witnesses that had been heard, his testimony presented nothing that we had not already known. Then suddenly he added a new piece of information. So far as we had been able to discover, the relations that had existed between Slyke and the members of his household had been the usual ones. I mean by that, that while there had been no unusual show of affection nor any signs of deep grief at his death, there had been no evidence of any trouble between them. When the butler was asked if he had ever heard words between Slyke and any member of his family, he surprised us all by saying that he had twice heard Miss Potter and the broker quarreling.

Miss Potter gave an angry start and turned a flushed face on the servant, who refused to meet her eyes. The girl by her side looked around at her aunt, startled. I glanced quickly at Bartley and saw an amused smile on his lips.

"You say you heard Miss Potter and Mr. Slyke quarreling?" asked the coroner.

The butler began to speak, but his words were drowned out by a terrific clap of thunder that shook the house. When the sound had died away in the distance, he answered, "Why, yes, sir, I did; twice."

As he paused and did not continue, the coroner asked him to tell us where the quarrel had taken place and what it had been about. From the rather self-satisfied expression on the butler's face, I judged that he was not only willing, but glad, to tell all that he had heard.



The Chauffeur Gave Her a Look Filled With Hatred, Blended With a Smile of Triumph.

"It was one evening in the dining room," he stated, "right after dinner, and only Miss Potter and Mr. Slyke were in the room. As I was about to enter from the butler's pantry, I heard Mr. Slyke say in a loud voice, 'You make me sick.' Then came Miss Potter's voice, very angry, 'I do, do I? Never mind. You will be a lot sicker before you get through. I tell you, there is lots of trouble ahead for you.' That's all I heard, for they left the room by another door."

"Do you know what they were talking about?"

The butler was silent a moment, then shook his head without speaking.

"And when was the second occasion that you heard them quarreling?" he was asked.

"It was about a week later, I think. One morning, when I was passing Mr. Slyke's room, I heard them again. He seemed to be very angry about something, I don't know what. His voice was loud enough to be heard through a closed door, 'I wish you could keep your mouth shut. It's none of your business, anyhow.' Then I heard Miss Potter; she was angry also 'You wait and see. It will be my business if you are not careful. If you keep on, something will happen to you.'"

This was an astonishing piece of information. After all, things had not gone as smoothly in the household as we had supposed. What the last expression "If you keep on, something will happen to you," might mean, I could not decide. It might have been a threat; and, in view of what had taken place, it would be necessary for Miss Potter to explain it. Glancing at her, I noticed that though angry and nervous she was not afraid. She seemed to regard what the butler had said as more annoying than accusing. When I looked at Bartley, he showed no surprise; but then I had scarcely expected that he would, for he made it a point never to be surprised at anything that might come up. The butler admitted that he did not know what the quarrel had been about, and that, with the exception of the two times he had mentioned, the relations that had existed between Slyke and his sister-in-law had always been very friendly.

The storm was now directly overhead. Claps of thunder were almost incessant, and vivid flashes of lightning penetrated the room in spite of the heavy curtains drawn over the windows.

As the butler left the stand, there was a slight commotion in the rear of the room; and turning, I saw Roche making his way between the chairs, pushing the chauffeur ahead of him. King gave the two men a puzzled glance, and then turned to the district attorney and whispered something to him. Miss Potter also turned to see what the noise was, and an expression of consternation and dread came over her face.

The two men passed within a foot of me, and the cruel lips and shifty eyes of the chauffeur made me wonder why Slyke should have kept such a man in his employ. When they reached the front of the room, Roche motioned the chauffeur to the empty chair next to Miss Potter, who drew as far away from him as she could, and then seated himself on the other side of his prisoner. The chauffeur gave her a look filled with hatred, blended with a smile of triumph. I could see that there was something wrong between these two.

A sharp peal of thunder seemed to split the air, causing the crowd to stir uneasily in their chairs. Again the lights flickered down for a moment, and again the thunder rolled. A violent wind lashed the rain against the windows behind me, and there was scarcely a pause between the flashes of lightning. The room was deathly still; we were petrified.

Doctor King was standing behind his desk, his face white, one hand playing nervously with the papers in front of him. He started at each vivid flash of lightning and the thunder seemed to daze him. Turning to the district attorney, and speaking half to him and half to the room, he said: "I think we should adjourn the inquest until tomorrow. The storm is so bad that I doubt if we can hear the testimony of the other witnesses."

His decision seemed to be very sensible. We had been unable to hear the close of the butler's evidence because of the thunder, and I doubted if any but those in the front seats would be able to hear the witnesses that were still to be called. The district attorney objected, however, to adjourning. He said that he could not be present the next day, and thought that we had better hear the remaining witnesses at once. Sinking back into his chair, King asked the attorney whom he wanted to call next.

The district attorney rose to his feet, saying slowly, "I am going to call Briffeur, who was chauffeur for Mr. Slyke. He will—"

But whatever he was going to add we never discovered. Just at that second there came a terrific flash of lightning that seemed to burn its way across the room, followed by a deafening clap of thunder. With a sizzle the lights went out and left the room as black as the inside of a coal mine. Low murmurs came from all sides. It was enough surely to try the nerves of the most stout-hearted.

As the rumble of thunder died away, I heard King demanding in a voice that shook a little, "Will somebody get a light—lamps or candles?"

Someone pushed back a chair, and then suddenly, rising above all else and ringing through the room with a horror that seemed to glue me to my seat, came a shriek of terror. It was sustained for a second, then died away in a long, sobbing moan.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Only White Houses Built

The Bermudas are a land of white houses. No other color is to be seen. They are all built of the native white stone of coral formation, which underlies every foot of soil. When first quarried the stone is so soft that it may be cut with a knife, but it hardens with exposure to the air. When a Bermudan wishes to build himself a house, all he has to do is to buy himself a piece of land and scrape off a foot or two of soil to reach his quarry. By means of a saw the stone is cut into pieces of the proper size. Thin flat slabs of the same material form the roof. The houses, even including the roofs, are frequently whitewashed on the outside, and contrast strongly with the deep green verdure by which they are surrounded. There are no shanties as there are in the rest of the world.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Stanislaw Kubinski and Anna Kubinski, his wife, Mortgagors, to Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, bearing date the 15th day of September, 1921, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, 1921, at 8 A. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 507,

And whereas, the said Andrew Falt and Cristina Falt, Mortgagees, has duly elected and do hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions thereof, and whereas there is due at the date of this notice upon said Mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $6,828.60, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the Mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lot Three (3), Southeast quarter (SE¼) of Northwest quarter (NW¼), and East half (E½) of Southwest quarter (SW¼) of Section Four (4), in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty (40) West, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front Door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 5th day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $6,828.60, and interest and taxes, if any, on said premises, and attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated March 20, 1923.

Great Northern Railway Shows
Results of 1922 Railroad Operation

The Interstate Commerce Commission issued on February 23, 1923, a report of its Bureau of Statistics on the "Results of Railroad Operation in 1922." The facts contained in this report are worthy of careful study by every person who wants to learn the truth about railroads. The report states:

1. That the railroads in 1922 had a net railway operating income of $777,000,000.

2. That in view of the fact that the fixed charges of the railroads, including interest, rents and similiar deductions, are around $669,000,000 "it will be seen that, regardless of any disputes about valuations, the roads did not earn enough in 1922, even if account be taken of the non-operating income which, before Federal control, averaged about $200,000,000 for the Class I operating steam roads."

3. That a return of 5 3-4 per cent on the Commission's tentative valuation of Class I roads would be $1,116,000,000 annually, whereas the net railway operating income for 1922 was $777,000,000. In other words, the railroads failed by nearly $340,000,000 to earn the 5 3-4 per cent allowed by law.

4. That "from the standpoint of the public, which is interested in the adequacy of the service, and in the fairness of the charges, two facts stand out prominently; one, an enormous traffic has recently been handled in spite of the strike handicaps; two, the average revenue per ton mile is pretty well in line with the general level of wholesale prices and there is no reason to believe that the general level of rates is retarding the business revival."

Great Northern Operating Revenues for Year 1922:

1.	Freight Transportation	$78,065,562.90
2.	Passenger Transportation	15,112,453.27
3.	Mail Transportation	2,849,623 16
4.	Express Transportation	2,709,958.53
5.	All Other Transportation Service	2,105.746.33
6.	Incidental	2,608,682.48
7.	Joint Facility—balance	910.60
8.	Total Receipts from Operation	$103,452,937..27

Great Northern Operating Expenses for Year 1922:

9.	Maintenance of Way and Structures	$ 13,158,322 58
10.	Maintenance of Equipment	19,585,289 56
11.	Traffic Expense	1,628,315,12
12.	Transportation Expense	42,179,200 93
13.	Miscellaneous Operations	1,220,616.95
14.	General Expense	2,474,455.24
15.	Transportation for Investment—Cr.	605,162 24
16.	Total Railway Operating Expense	$ 79,636,038 09
17.	Net Revenue from Railway Operations	$23,816,899.18
18.	Railway Tax Accruals	8,097,725 33
19	Uncollectible Revenues	15,534 14
20.	Railway Operating Income	$ 15,703,639.71
21.	Equipment Rents	$ 1,799,023.25
22.	Joint Facility Rents—Dr.	226,065.12
23.	Net of Items 20, 21 and 22	$ 17,276.597.84
24.	Annual Interest on Funded Debt	8,832,599.60
25.	Left for Dividends	$ 8,443,998.24

The capital stock of the Great Northern Railway Company is $250,000,000. It is owned by about 44,000 stockholders. A dividend at the rate of 3 1-3 per cent per annum would require $8,333,333.33.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

TAKE NOTICE That default has occurred and exists in the conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delivered by Albert Hetland and Nettie Hetland, his wife, mortgagors, to A. D. Stephens, dated January 16th, 1919, duly filed for record in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 13th day of February, 1919, at 9 o'clock A. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on page 587; which mortgage together with the debt evidenced thereby was duly assigned by said A. D. Stephens to The First National Bank of Shakopee, Minn., (a corporation) by instrument in writing dated on the 17th day of February, 1920, and duly filed for record on the 20th day of February, 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., and duly recorded in Book 86 of Mortgages on page 326. The amount claimed to be due and which is actually due on said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of two-thousand one-hundred twenty-one and 45-100ths ($2,121.45) dollars. The mortgaged premises are described as follows:- Lot three (3) of section six (6), in township one-hundred fifty-five (155), north of range forty-three (43), and lot four (4) and the southeast quarter (SE 1-4) of the southwest quarter (SW1-4) of section thirty-one (31), in township one-hundred fifty-six (156), north of range forty-three (43), west of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County, Minnesota.

That by virtue of a power of sale in said mortgage contained, and agreeable to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said premises at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Marshall Co., Minn. on Wednesday, the 23rd day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren, Marshall County, Minnesota, to satisfy the amount then due thereon, taxes paid, if any, seventy-five ($75.00) dollars attorneys' fees together with the disbursements o these foreclosure proceedings.

CHAPTER X

Sudden Death.

For a moment after the cry had died away the only sound to be heard was the dashing of the rain against the windows and the lashing of the trees outside. Everyone was too startled and frightened to move. I felt Bartley's hand on my arm, his fingers sinking deep into my flesh. Then the spell was broken, and men asked each other in excited whispers what had happened.

The cry had seemed to come from the front of the room. It had been one of horror, dread and surprise, as if the person uttering it had met with some unexpected and awful experience. It had been a man's voice, and I wondered whose it could have been.

"Come on, Pelt."

Bartley pushed back his chair and half dragged me to my feet. We started to grope our way between the chairs toward the place from which the cry had come. The room was still in darkness and our progress was very slow. Then the lights began to flicker very dimly, and suddenly flashed on again in all their power.

At first glance, there seemed to be nothing wrong; then I noticed that King was bending over his desk, his face dead white, his eyes fixed on something on the floor in front of him, and fear showing in every feature. I realized suddenly that the chauffeur's chair was empty, and that Roche was on his knees before some object. Miss Potter, who had also been staring at the floor, fainted and fell sidewise into the arms of her niece. Then I saw what was the matter: the chauffeur was lying on the floor, with his face white, and his eyes closed.

Bartley dropped to his knees beside Roche and gave one searching look at the man, then straightened up with a queer expression on his face. He pointed silently to the chauffeur. On his brown coat, slowly darkening and widening, was a splotch of blood, and from his breast protruded the hilt of a knife.

For a moment my head swam. Only a short time before the lights had gone out the chauffeur had had a self-confident sneer on his face; now he was lying on the floor, white and still, a knife in his breast. Another murder had taken place in Slyke's house, and this time in a room crowded with people.

The district attorney and Doctor Webster had by now reached our side, and the doctor knelt down by the chauffeur. With a glance at the excited crowd pushing its way toward us, Bartley suggested to Roche that he clear the room of all but the family. It was not until he had called some of his men to his aid that he was able to make the excited spectators obey his orders and withdraw. Doctor King was assisting Ruth to restore her aunt to consciousness. As for Bartley, myself and Black, who had come forward, we had eyes for nothing but the silent figure of the chauffeur.

Doctor Webster opened his coat and examined the wound. Then, when he had turned back his eyelids and felt his pulse, he slowly shook his head and said to Bartley: "He can't live more than five minutes. The knife reached his heart."

"Will he recover consciousness before he dies?" Bartley asked.

"I can't say. He might, for a moment."

Even as he spoke the chauffeur opened his eyes, eyes that still retained their look of horror and dazed surprise. Weakly his glance traveled over the faces bending over him; he tried to raise one hand, but the effort was too much for him and his eyes closed again. When he opened them a second time, he seemed to recognize Bartley and gave him such an appealing look that he bent closer. His eyes had begun to glaze and his face to take on a waxen hue. Though his lips moved feebly, no words came from them. Then, with a final effort, he gathered up what little strength he had left, and, in a voice so low we could hardly distinguish the words, he stammered forth, "The—robbery—robbery. Those men—innocent, ask—boy."

His voice died away and his eyelids sank; then he opened them again and gasped, "The—boy—he knows."

I saw Bartley's face lighten, but he did not speak. Briffeur lay so still that we thought he had ceased to breathe; but, as the doctor started to rise, he made a sudden effort to sit up, and Bartley put his arm under him. With eyes flashing, he cried in a loud voice, "Slyke—mur-murdered. I—" His arm rose from his side and pointed straight in front of him, his finger almost touching Doctor Webster, who gazed down at him, puzzled. "I—killed—" The chauffeur's voice broke; his lips ceased to move; and, without even a sigh, his head fell back. The chauffeur would never speak again.

Silently we rose to our feet, and stood looking down at the dead man. We were all too overcome by what had taken place, to speak. It seemed impossible that a man could have been done to death in a roomful of people with the chief of police on one side of him and three detectives near him. But murdered he had been. Bartley seemed to feel as dazed as I did; for he took the knife the doctor handed him, without looking at it, his eyes upon the chauffeur and on his face a very odd expression. None of us seemed fully able to grasp that a man had been murdered almost before our eyes.

Doctor King had been working over Miss Potter, and she now opened her eyes and glanced around wildly. She saw the body at her feet, and with a little cry asked, "What's happened?"

No one answered for a moment; and then Bartley replied simply, "Someone has murdered the chauffeur."

At the word murder she gasped and covered her eyes with her hand. After a moment she removed it, and stammered, "H-how—who?"

No one attempted to answer. The truth was that no one could. All we knew was that he had been killed by the knife that was now in Bartley's hand. But how, why, and by whom it was done, none of us knew. It seemed incredible that anyone could have crept up to the murdered man in the dark without being heard by those seated on either side of him. His cry had lasted but the barest fraction of a second; it seemed scarcely time enough between the moment when the lights went out and the time when the cry came for anyone to have come up to him, murdered him, and gotten away again. The murder must have been committed by someone near him. On one side of him had been Miss Potter; and, on the other, Roche. Roche was above suspicion; a police chief does not kill his prisoner unless he attempts to escape. Then I remembered the strange look that had passed between Miss Potter and the chauffeur when the latter had entered the room.

Though there had evidently been ill-feeling between the two, it seemed absurd to suppose that she had killed him. To have done it, she would have had to have known that he would be seated beside her. I knew that no one but the coroner had known beforehand how the witnesses would be placed. Nor could she have known that the lights would go out just when they did, and thus give a chance to strike the blow. It dawned on me, at this point, that she could not have known that the chauffeur would be called as a witness, and might not have even known that he had been arrested. Yet the blow had been struck by some one near him, and very near to him.

At this moment Roche hurried into the room, his fat red face flushed to an even redder hue, his eyes wide and curious.

"What shall I do with those people outside?" he asked the district attorney. "I got them out of the house, but the reporters are howling their heads off. They want to know what has happened."

The attorney gave Bartley an appealing look.

"If I were you," Bartley told him, "I would call the inquest off for today at least. You have heard all the important evidence. What Briffeur might have said we shall never know. Our duty now is to try and discover what happened to the poor chap."

He turned to Doctor King. "If I were you, Doctor, I would take the name of every one that was in the room this afternoon. You might tell the reporters, Roche, that we will talk to them later."

As both King and the district attorney nodded, Roche hurried from the room, but returned a moment later. Again we stood hesitating, no one seeming to know just what to do next, waiting for Bartley to take the lead. Seeing that we were depending on him, he walked to the desk where King had sat, and called us around him.

Silently he turned the knife over and over in his hand, then gave it to each of us in turn to examine. It was a curious kind of a knife, looking as if it had had hard usage. The handle was of wood, rather heavy, and the blade, some four inches long, came to a fine, sharp point. As the blade did not close, it was an awkward weapon to carry around, and I wondered where the murderer had hidden it. The more I looked at it, the more I wondered what it had been used for. It was not a hunting knife, although it somewhat resembled one, of that I was sure. It fact, it was unlike any knife that I had ever seen.

We all looked at it silently; and when the last to handle it had placed it back on the desk, Bartley picked it up for a second time.

"This is the weapon that killed Briffeur. You wonder why I allowed you to touch it instead of keeping it for finger prints. You will find no finger prints; for whoever used it had sense enough to have his hand covered."

Suddenly I remembered that he had said the same thing about the murderer of Slyke. There had been no finger prints found in the rooms or on the revolver. I wondered if there could be any connection between the two deaths.

"It is, of course, significant," Bartley continued, his voice grave, "that this man was killed as he was about to testify. It looks very much as if someone in the room feared that he might tell who killed Slyke, and, to prevent it, took a great chance and killed him in a room full of people."

Doctor King, in a rather excited voice, broke in to say, "But, Mr. Bartley, no one could have known that the lights would go out. I myself did not even know that Briffeur was to testify, and I doubt if anyone else did."

Bartley listened to the doctor's words with a grave face. "That is so, King. So far as I know, only Roche, Black, the district attorney and myself knew that the chauffeur would testify. None of us knew, however, what he was going to say, for he had refused to tell us. It is absurd to think that any of us killed Briffeur. Pelt, Black and myself were at the rear of the room. The district attorney was at least seven feet away from him. The only person near him was our friend Roche."

The red face of the police chief turned even redder. In astonishment he hastily stammered, "My G—, Mr. Bartley, you don't think I killed him, do you?"

Under any other circumstances his dismay would have been so humorous that we all would have laughed, but we had no desire to do so now. We all agreed with Bartley, when he assured him that no one had even thought for a moment that he had committed the murder. He added that his remark had been intended simply to show how mysterious the crime was.

"It seems almost incredible," he continued after a short pause, "that the chauffeur could have been killed while we were all in the room with him. But he has been, and we must find out who did it. I think the best thing to do will be for each of us to seat himself just where he was when the lights went out. But first, we had better remove the body."

Black, Roche and Doctor Webster raised the chauffeur's body and carried him from the room, followed by Doctor King. While they were gone, Bartley got down on his knees before the chair in which the chauffeur had sat, and examined the heavy dark blue carpet which covered the floor. He was searching for a clue, I knew, that would give a hint as to how the murder had been committed. Miss Potter and Ruth, who had resumed their old seats, watched him with white faces.

When he rose to his feet Bartley stood looking silently down at the floor with a little frown on his face. At last he turned to me and said, "When Briffeur came into this room and took his chair, Pelt, he was, of course, facing the coroner and the district attorney. When we found him after the lights came on, he had sunk to the floor in a position directly opposite to that in which he was seated—that is, with his back to them. It may be that, at the moment of the blow, he had half turned to see what had happened to the lights, or he may have swung around after the blow as he was slipping to the floor."

I nodded, and he continued, "You notice that the blow came very close to the center of the heart. The murderer knew where to strike. If his knife had reached the place aimed for, the chauffeur would have died without uttering a word. In fact—"

He was prevented from saying more by the return of the others. At his suggestion, they took the places they had occupied when the lights went out. I was asked to take the chair that Briffeur had been in. This placed Roche on my left, so near that I almost touched him, and Miss Potter about a foot away on my right. Doctor King took his station behind the desk, which was directly in front of me and about eight feet away. The chair of the district attorney was at his side. Black and Webster stood near Bartley, who had seated himself on the desk.

For several moments he glanced around the room, trying to recreate for himself the way the row of chairs had looked when the lights had been extinguished. As his keen eyes studied us, a frown came to his face, lingered a second, then faded away.

"You people in the front row," he commented, "were the nearest to the chauffeur. If anything was heard, you would have been the ones to hear it. Of course, the rattle of the thunder would have drowned almost any other sound. The crowd was a bit uneasy, too, because of the sharp lightning, and made a little rustling noise of its own; yet it seems almost incredible that anyone could have crept up to Briffeur and struck him down without either Miss Potter or Roche having heard them."

History of Baldwin Apple.

The Department of Agriculture says that soon after 1740 the Baldwin came up as a chance seedling on the farm of John Ball Wilmington, near Lowell, Mass., and for about forty years afterward its cultivation was confined to that immediate neighborhood. Eventually the farm came into the possession of a Mr. Butters, who gave the apple the name Woodpecker or Pecker, and it was also called Butters. Deacon Samuel Thompson, a surveyor of Wolburn, brought it to the attention of Colonel Baldwin of the same town, by whom it was propagated and more widely introduced in eastern Massachusetts as early as 1784. From Colonel Baldwin's interest in the variety it came to be called the Baldwin. In 1817 the original tree was still alive, but it perished between 1817 and 1832. A monument to the Baldwin apple now marks the location.

On the Night Shift.

Nighthawks and whippoorwills work chiefly at night, when most of the other birds are off duty, and at daybreak their good work is taken up by the swifts and swallows, says Nature magazine of Washington. These birds are provided with big scapnet mouths, and as they swing through the air over wide areas of country, they scoop up almost unbelievable numbers of insects. Six hundred were taken from the stomach of a single Arkansas nighthawk.

Over $7500.00 for Grape-Nuts Recipes

The Postum Cereal Company will buy not less than 101 Recipes or suggestions for new Uses of Grape-Nuts, paying $50.00 for each one accepted. And in addition—

Good Housekeeping Institute, conducted by Good Housekeeping Magazine, will decide an award of $2500.00 for the best four of the 101 or more Recipes or suggestions for new Uses of Grape-Nuts, so purchased:

$1000.00 for the 1st selection $750.00 for the 2nd selection
$500.00 for the 3rd selection $250.00 for the 4th selection

Read carefully the terms of this offer so that you may have the fullest opportunity to share in its benefits. The conditions are so simple and fair that every housewife in the United States can take part in this National Recipe Festival!

There Is No Other Food Like Grape-Nuts

WHILE practically every man, woman and child in the English-speaking world knows Grape-Nuts as a delicious, nourishing and wholesome cereal, and while it is common knowledge that Grape-Nuts with milk or cream is a complete food, many housewives do not know of the appetizing and economical dishes that can be prepared with Grape-Nuts. It lends itself, we believe, to more uses than any other cereal. The convenience and economy of Grape-Nuts, and the flavor, zest and wholesomeness which it imparts to other food, make it invaluable in every home.

Frequently we receive interesting letters from women throughout the country, telling about the attractive dishes they make with Grape-Nuts—delicious puddings, salads, dressings for fowls, etc. No doubt there are thousands of women who are finding varied uses for Grape-Nuts in their home cooking, and even more thousands who will be glad to learn of those varied uses; for while we all cling to old favorite dishes, we also welcome and enjoy a change.

So that is the thought back of our offer of more than $7500.00 in cash for new ways of using Grape-Nuts. To those women who are already using Grape-Nuts in various ways, other than as a breakfast cereal or in the recipes given here, and to those women who would like to try their hand at developing some new way to use Grape-Nuts, we offer to buy at $50.00 each not less than 101 new Grape-Nuts Recipes. We plan to include these new Recipes in a beautifully illustrated cook book.

What Is Grape-Nuts?

Grape-Nuts is a highly nutritious food in the form of crisp, golden granules. It contains the full nutriment of wheat and barley, including vitamin-B and mineral elements required for building sturdy health. These elements are often lacking in the ordinary diet, chiefly through "over-refinement" in the preparation of food.

No other food is so thoroughly baked as Grape-Nuts. More than 20 hours are consumed in the baking process which makes Grape-Nuts easy to digest, and also develops a natural sweetness from the grains themselves.

The form and crispness of Grape-Nuts invite thorough mastication—a decided advantage because this not only provides proper exercise for the teeth, but makes for good digestion.

Every housewife in the Land should take advantage of this extraordinary opportunity to earn the tidy sum of $50.00 by a little pleasant and educational effort in her own home. Also the fair and equal chance to secure one of the liberal awards to be made by Good Housekeeping Institute.

Moreover, there's the greater knowledge of the value of Grape-Nuts, not only as a delicious breakfast cereal, but in the preparation of a variety of appetizing dishes that add to the health and pleasure of the whole family.

Conditions Governing the Purchase of, and Awards for Grape-Nuts Recipes

The Postum Cereal Company will buy not less than 101 Recipes or suggestions for new Uses of Grape-Nuts, paying $50.00 for each one accepted. This offer is open to every person in the United States.

Good Housekeeping Institute, conducted by Good Housekeeping Magazine, will decide an award of $2500.00 for the best four of the 101 or more Recipes or suggestions for new Uses of Grape-Nuts, so purchased. $1000.00 for the 1st selection; $750.00 for the 2nd selection; $500.00 for the 3rd selection; and $250.00 for the 4th selection.

Recipes must be mailed between May 1st, 1923 and August 31st, 1923.

Recipes or suggestions for new uses submitted for purchase must not duplicate any of the ten Recipes printed in this announcement.

No Recipe will be purchased from anyone directly or indirectly connected with the Postum Cereal Company, Inc., or Good Housekeeping Institute.

If more than one Recipe is offered, each must be written on a separate sheet. Write name and address plainly on each Recipe submitted.

In the event of a tie for any award offered, an award identical in all respects with that tied for will be made to each one tying.

It is not necessary to purchase Grape-Nuts. A suitable quantity will be sent upon request to those desiring to submit recipes.

Your Recipe should state the exact number intended to be served. Recipes should be carefully tested to make sure that proportions and directions for preparing will bring best results.

Form of Recipe: First, write name of your Recipe at top of sheet; underneath list all ingredients, using level measurements only; then the directions for preparing, worded simply and accurately. Do not send specimen dish.

In considering Recipes for purchase, and for awards by Good Housekeeping Institute, account will be taken of the following points:

(a) Palatability.
(b) Simplicity and economy.
(c) Accuracy and clearness of expression of recipe.

Announcement of the Recipes purchased, and Awards by Good Housekeeping Institute, will be made in January Good Housekeeping.

Recipes submitted to the Postum Cereal Company for purchase will not be returned.

All Recipes must be addressed to
RECIPE DEPARTMENT
Postum Cereal Company, Inc., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Below are ten Recipes showing a few of the many appetizing dishes that can be made with Grape-Nuts. Read them over, try some of them, and then you will find it easy to work out a new Recipe or think of a new use for Grape-Nuts, that we may purchase. And remember, your Recipe or suggestion for new use of Grape-Nuts may also merit one of the large awards.

GRAPE-NUTS Ice Cream

Prepare plain flavored ice cream in the usual way. Just before the cream hardens in freezing, add Grape-Nuts as it comes from the package, in the proportion of one-half cup of Grape-Nuts to one quart of ice cream. If you buy ice cream ready made, add Grape-Nuts in place of nutmeats. You'll find the resulting flavor unique.

GRAPE-NUTS Salad

1 cup Grape-Nuts
1 sliced orange
½ cup cubed pineapple
2 cubed bananas
2 teaspoons lemon-juice
Cream Salad Dressing

Cut up the fruit, add lemon-juice, mix with Grape-Nuts, and serve on bed of lettuce with Cream Salad Dressing. Makes four to six portions.

GRAPE-NUTS Six Minute Pudding

1 cup Grape-Nuts
1½ cups scalded milk
1 tablespoon sugar
½ cup raisins

Cover Grape-Nuts with scalded milk. Add sugar, raisins, and a little nutmeg. Cook six minutes directly over the heat, stirring constantly, and serve with any good pudding sauce. Makes four to six portions.

GRAPE-NUTS Cookies

1 cup Grape-Nuts
½ cup shortening
1¼ cups light brown sugar
½ cup milk
2 well-beaten eggs
2¼ cups flour
2 teaspoons baking-powder
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon cloves
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup chopped seeded raisins

Cream shortening and sugar. Add milk and well-beaten eggs. Add well-sifted dry ingredients, and raisins that have been dusted with part of the flour, and then the Grape-Nuts. Beat thoroughly and drop from a spoon on baking sheet one and one-half inches apart. Bake in moderate oven for fifteen minutes.

GRAPE-NUTS Cheese Casserole

¼ cup Grape-Nuts
1½ cups milk
1 tablespoon butter
¼ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1¼ cups chopped American cheese
2 eggs
Few grains paprika

Scald the milk. Add Grape-Nuts, butter and seasonings and combine with the cheese and eggs, the latter slightly beaten. Pour into a buttered baking dish, surround with hot water and bake slowly for forty-five minutes in a slow oven. Serve as the main course at luncheon, supper, or a meatless dinner. Makes four to six portions.

GRAPE-NUTS Fruit Pudding

1 cup Grape-Nuts
1 package lemon Jell-O or lemon flavored gelatine
1 pint boiling water
½ cup seeded raisins or chopped dates

Add the boiling water to the Jell-O or lemon flavored gelatine and stir until it is dissolved. Pour into a mould, and after the mixture has cooled slightly, add the Grape-Nuts and fruit; then allow the mixture to chill and harden. Makes four to six portions.

GRAPE-NUTS Meat Loaf

1 cup Grape-Nuts
1 pound veal, mutton or beef
⅛ pound salt pork
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons milk
1 egg
½ tablespoon lemon-juice
2 tablespoons tomato catsup
½ tablespoon chopped parsley
½ minced onion

Put the meat through a food chopper, add seasonings. Brown minced onion in a little fat before adding Grape-Nuts, milk, and slightly beaten eggs. Pack in a baking dish, shaping like a loaf of baked bread and smooth evenly on top. Bake for forty-five minutes, basting frequently using one-half cup of hot water, a tablespoon at a time. Just before taking from oven, brush with some of the beaten white of egg and a little milk. Brown for one minute. Makes four portions.

GRAPE-NUTS Loaf Cake

1 cup Grape-Nuts
½ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
3 eggs
1 cup milk
2½ cups Pastry flour
2 teaspoons baking-powder
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon vanilla

Cream butter and sugar; add egg-yolks well beaten; then milk and Grape-Nuts. Beat the mixture thoroughly, fold in alternately the stiffly beaten egg-whites and flour sifted with baking-powder three times; lastly, add the vanilla. Have cake pan previously greased and lightly floured; fill two-thirds full and bake in a moderate oven for forty-five minutes.

GRAPE-NUTS Tomato Soup

¼ cup Grape-Nuts
1 quart tomatoes
2 cups water
10 peppercorns
1 sliced onion
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon soda
4 whole cloves
3 tablespoons butter

Cook tomatoes, water and seasonings twenty minutes; strain and add salt and soda. Crush the Grape-Nuts with a rolling pin. Melt the butter, add the rolled Grape-Nuts, combine and heat the soup to the boiling point. Substitute whole Grape-Nuts for croutons in serving individual soup plates. Makes four to six portions.

GRAPE-NUTS Fudge

½ cup Grape-Nuts
2 cups granulated sugar
1 cup milk
2 squares chocolate
⅛ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons butter
½ teaspoon vanilla

Combine the sugar, milk, chocolate and salt; place over a slow heat, and stir constantly until the sugar is dissolved. Then continue boiling gently, without stirring, until the thermometer registers 238 degrees F., or the mixture forms a soft ball when dropped in cold water. Set the pan in bowl of cold water and allow to stand undisturbed until there is no heat in the fudge mixture. Remove and add the butter and vanilla. Beat the mixture until creamy and thick, then add Grape-Nuts and continue beating until stiff enough to knead. Turn out on a buttered plate and cut into desired squares.

The sum of $2,000 was raised for advertising the state of Minnesota, and the attractions it offers to settlers. The meeting was the first of a series to be held in many Minnesota counties.

Willmar—The churches of this city will explain from the pulpit the new plan for religious instruction in the schools of Willmar. The third to eighth grades are included. The new plan will go into effect next fall. Classes will be in the churches and regular credits given for the work.

Janesville—Miss Gretchen Hoffman is valedictorian and Miss Helen Byron salutatorian of the Janesville high school class of 1923. Dr. Frank Nelson, president of Minnesota college, Minneapolis, will deliver the commencement address at exercises to be conducted May 21.

HOUNDS SPOILED HER SOLO

Impression Made by Young Songstress Quite Different From the One Intended.

I was spending the week-end with a friend of my mother's, who lived with her eligible son on a large country estate. I was taking vocal lessons and took myself quite seriously.

The morning after my arrival, seeing my host out in the vicinity of the stables, I decked myself in my best bib and tucker and sauntered to the garden, accompanied by two big hounds. From the corner of a watchful eye I saw my audience approaching, and I burst forth in my most wonderful soprano. Simultaneously the hounds lifted their faces to heaven, even as I, and joined me in a most hideous cry.

My sense of humor came to my rescue, and I joined the master in his laughter, but I could have cried much more easily.—Chicago Tribune.

I was the last to enroll in the English class and the young instructor had copied my name—Dowling—hurriedly as the class bell sounded.

He called the roll with much gusto until he came to the badly scribbled last name. A pause.

Then in an uncertain voice he said: "Darling?" Silence. "Darling!" he exclaimed.

"Do you mean me?" I murmured.

The ensuing shouts of laughter filled me with greater embarrassment than I ever experienced.—Exchange.

QUITE A "PROMINENT FELLER"

Fact That "A. Louer" Was Very Much in Evidence in Paris Impressed Jay Gould.

Mrs Barton French, who had taken a villa on the sea near Monte Carlo for the winter, said at a dinner party:

"We Americans are poor linguists as a rule. I remember a story that Lord Dunraven once told me about Jay Gould.

"Jay Gould was visiting Paris, and Lord Dunraven devoted a day to driving him over the city. There happened to be a good many apartments to let at the time, and to-let signs—A Louer—were stuck up everywhere. Jay Gould didn't seem to notice the Arc de Triomphe or Notre Dame, or anything. A queer, silent little chap, Lord Dunraven said.

"But at the end of the day's sightseeing Mr. Gould displayed a little interest at last.

"'Who's this here A. Louer, Mr. Dunraven?' he said. 'Seems a pretty prominent feller.'"

Chinese Take to Frozen Meat

Argentina is giving Australia a run for her money in supplying China and the Far East with frozen meat. While the Chinese have in the past preferred the taste and smell of fresh-killed meat, they are gradually being educated to eat the frozen variety, says Consul General Thomas Sammons, Melbourne, in a report just received by the Department of Commerce, and there is a general belief that they will ultimately become accustomed to using frozen meat freely. On the other hand, Australian butter is selling well in China and Japan, while canned fruits and jams from the island continent are being taken in increasing quantities.

98 OUT OF EVERY 100 WOMEN BENEFITED

An Absolutely Reliable Statement Important to Every Woman

Remarkable Results Shown by a Nation Wide Canvass of Women Purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. 50,000 Women Answer

For some time a circular has been enclosed with each bottle of our medicine bearing this question: "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

Replies, to date, have been received from over 50,000 women answering that question.

98 per cent of which say YES. That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take the medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This is a most remarkable record of efficiency. We doubt if any other medicine in the world equals it.

Think of it—only two women out of 100 received no benefit—98 successes out of a possible 100.

Did you ever hear anything like it? We must admit that we, ourselves, are astonished.

Of course we know that our medicine does benefit the large majority of women who take it. But that only two out of 100 received no benefit is most astonishing.

It only goes to prove, however, that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure all—one that is made by the most scientific process; not from drugs, but from a combination of nature's roots and herbs, can and does do more good than hastily prepared prescriptions.

You see, we have been making, improving and refining this medicine for over 50 years until it is so perfect and so well adapted to women's needs that it actually has the virtue to benefit 98 out of every 100 women who take it.

Its reliability and recognized efficiency has gained for it a sale in almost every country in the world—leading all others.

Such evidence should induce every woman suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and see if she can't be one of the 98. The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Protecting Alaskan Game.

New regulations for the protection of game in certain localities in Alaska have been approved by the secretary of agriculture, effective April 1, 1923. The only important change made was that eliminating certain islands in southeastern Alaska on which the killing of deer was prohibited in the past. Kruzof island, however, is still retained as a deer preserve. The killing of mountain sheep and mountain goats in the eastern part of the Kenai peninsula is prohibited until April 1, 1925. There still remains a closed season on deer west of longitude 141 degrees.

Great Northern Railway Shows
Results of 1922 Railroad Operation

The Interstate Commerce Commission issued on February 23, 1923, a report of its Bureau of Statistics on the "Results of Railroad Operation in 1922." The facts contained in this report are worthy of careful study by every person who wants to learn the truth about railroads. The report states:

1. That the railroads in 1922 had a net railway operating income of $777,000,000.

2. That in view of the fact that the fixed charges of the railroads, including interest, rents and similiar deductions, are around $669,000,000 "it will be seen that, regardless of any disputes about valuations, the roads did not earn enough in 1922, even if account be taken of the non-operating income which, before Federal control, averaged about $200,000,000 for the Class I operating steam roads."

3. That a return of 5 3-4 per cent on the Commission's tentative valuation of Class I roads would be $1,116,000,000 annually, whereas the net railway operating income for 1922 was $777,000,000. In other words, the railroads failed by nearly $340,000,000 to earn the 5 3-4 per cent allowed by law.

4. That "from the standpoint of the public, which is interested in the adequacy of the service, and in the fairness of the charges, two facts stand out prominently; one, an enormous traffic has recently been handled in spite of the strike handicaps; two, the average revenue per ton mile is pretty well in line with the general level of wholesale prices and there is no reason to believe that the general level of rates is retarding the business revival."

Great Northern Operating Revenues for Year 1922:

1.	Freight Transportation	$78,065,562.90
2.	Passenger Transportation	15,112,453.27
3.	Mail Transportation	2,849,623 16
4.	Express Transportation	2,709,958.53
5.	All Other Transportation Service	2,105.746.33
6.	Incidental	2,608,682.48
7.	Joint Facility—balance	910.60
8.	Total Receipts from Operation	$103,452,937..27

Great Northern Operating Expenses for Year 1922:

9.	Maintenance of Way and Structures	$ 13,153,322.58
10.	Maintenance of Equipment	19,585,289.56
11.	Traffic Expense	1,628,315,12
12.	Transportation Expense	42,179,200 93
13.	Miscellaneous Operations	1,220,616.95
14	General Expense	2,474,455.24
15.	Transportation for Investment—Cr.	605,162 24
16.	Total Railway Operating Expense	$ 79,636,038.09
17.	Net Revenue from Railway Operations	$23,816,899.18
18.	Railway Tax Accruals	8,097,725.33
19	Uncollectible Revenues	15,534 14
20.	Railway Operating Income	$ 15,703,639.71
21.	Equipment Rents	$ 1,799,023.25
22.	Joint Facility Rents—Dr.	226,065.12
23.	Net of Items 20, 21 and 22	$ 17,276.587.84
24.	Annual Interest on Funded Debt	8,832,599.60
25.	Left for Dividends	$ 8,443,998.24

The capital stock of the Great Northern Railway Company is $250,000,000. It is owned by about 44,000 stockholders. A dividend at the rate of 3 1-3 per cent per annum would require $8,333,333.33.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

TAKE NOTICE That default has occurred and exists in the conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delivered by Albert Hetland and Nettie Hetland, his wife, mortgagors, to A. D. Stephens, dated January 16th, 1919, duly filed for record in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 13th day of February, 1919, at 9 o'clock A. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on page 587; which mortgage together with the debt evidenced thereby was duly assigned by said A. D. Stephens to The First National Bank of Shakopee, Minn., (a corporation) by instrument in writing dated on the 17th day of February, 1920, and duly filed for record on the 20th day of February, 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., and duly recorded in Book 86 of Mortgages on page 326. The amount claimed to be due and which is actually due on said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of two-thousand one-hundred twenty-one and 45-100ths ($2,121.45) dollars. The mortgaged premises are described as follows:- Lot three (3) of section six (6), in township one-hundred fifty-five (155), north of range forty-three (43), and lot four (4) and the southeast quarter (SE 1-4) of the southwest quarter (SW1-4) of section thirty-one (31), in township one-hundred fifty-six (156), north of range forty-three (43), west of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County, Minnesota.

That by virtue of a power of sale in said mortgage contained, and agreeable to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said premises at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Marshall Co., Minn. on Wednesday, the 23rd day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren, Marshall County, Minnesota, to satisfy the amount then due thereon, taxes paid, if any, seventy-five ($75.00) dollars attorneys' fees together with the disbursements o these foreclosure proceedings.

Married

Miss Hilma Nyberg and Victor Johnson were united in marriage last Saturday, by Rev. Theo. Myhrer at the parsonage in Newfolden.

Immediately after the ceremony the wedding party consisting of bride and groom and the formers sister and friend, the Misses Albertina Nyberg and Swanhild Rasmussen, departed for Grand Forks for a short visit with Miss Gladys Hagen, returning to Holt Sunday evening.

This worthy couple number their friends by their acquaintances and THE NEWS joins all in extending to them a hearty much joy.

They will not go to housekeeping for the present while the groom has work on the dredge but will stay at her mother's home for the summer.

The Misses Gunhild Sollom and Albertina Nyberg were hostesses at a Nuptial shower given Miss Hilmer Nyberg last Thursday evening at the pleasant home of Mrs. A. L. Carlson. The surprise was well planned, for when Miss Nyberg returned from a joy ride to Middle River with Miss Gunhild and was ushered into the front room which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, only to meet a bunch of young people assembled to do her honor, the surprise was so great that the first thot was a hasty retreat, but being so suddenly surrounded with happy and joyful greetings, the capitulation was complete. A very enjoyable evening was spent in various ways followed by a most delicious repast.

The honored guest was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts, which she will cherish with fond memories of the happy occasion.

As Miss Nyberg was a favorite not only with the young people but with the married ladies as well, a second surprise party was put in operation, chaperoned by Mrs. Hazel Olson, Mrs. Gladys Reierson, and Mrs. Edna Haggland, last Friday night at the home of her mother.

With well laden baskets and joy in the heart, the bunch unceremoniously walked in and took possession. Needless to say that the surprise of Thursday night was duplicated Friday night. The trio of entertainers planned to keep things humming and as it was a very informal party, it was rollicking fun from start to finish. Some beautiful presents were presented to the honored recipient. After a most delicious lunch was served, each one in turn before departing wished the bride to be, joy, happiness and blessings.

Will have a car of feed oats at the Holt Farmers Elevator first part of next week.

Mrs. Torger Ness is improving her residence property with a coat of paint. Rudolph Nyhus is doing the work.

Miss Olava Sollom who teaches at Angus and Miss Myrtle who attends school at Thief River Falls, both visited here Sunday with their sister, Mrs. A. L. Carlson and family.

Mrs. John Holst had the thumb and fore finger of her left hand badly crushed by the break of their windmill, last Friday. She was taken to the Thief River hospital where it was found her finger was so badly crushed that amputation was necessary.

When in town make the Holt Cafe your home, we want you to feel at home.

Children's Clinic

Preparations are being made for an Infants and Children Free Clinic to be held in the school basement on May 24th. under the auspices of the County Public Health Association. The clinic will begin at nine o'clock in the morning and continue until 4:30 in the afternoon, and will be conducted by a doctor who specializes in childrens diseases.

The clinic is free to everyone.

The clinic is scientific in nature and the doctor is there for the purpose of discovering physical imperfections and to give advice concerning them so that they can be corrected before they become permanent defects. The doctor will tell each mother the exact condition of her child, suggest the diet, make the diagnosis and leave to the parents the choice of any physician they may desire to do any prescribing or give the treatment necessary for the child.

2. That in view of the fact that the fixed charges of the railroads, including interest, rents and similiar deductions, are around $669,000,000 "it will be seen that, regardless of any disputes about valuations, the roads did not earn enough in 1922, even if account be taken of the non-operating income which, before Federal control, averaged about $200,000,000 for the Class I operating steam roads."

3. That a return of 5 3-4 per cent on the Commission's tentative valuation of Class I roads would be $1,116,000,000 annually, whereas the net railway operating income for 1922 was $777,000,000. In other words, the railroads failed by nearly $340,000,000 to earn the 5 3-4 per cent allowed by law

4. That "from the standpoint of the public, which is interested in the adequacy of the service, and in the fairness of the charges, two facts stand out prominently, one, an enormous traffic has recently been handled in spite of the strike handicaps; two, the average revenue per ton mile is pretty well in line with the general level of wholesale prices and there is no reason to believe that the general level of rates is retarding the business revival."

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

TAKE NOTICE That default has occurred and exists in the conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delivered by Albert Hetland and Nettie Hetland, his wife, mortgagors, to A. D. Stephens, dated January 16th, 1919; duly filed for record in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 13th day of February, 1919, at 9 o'clock A. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on page 587; which mortgage together with the debt evidenced thereby was duly assigned by said A. D. Stephens to The First National Bank of Shakopee, Minn., (a corporation) by instrument in writing dated on the 17th day of February, 1920, and duly filed for record on the 20th day of February, 1920, at 8 o'clock A. M., and duly recorded in Book 86 of Mortgages on page 326, The amount claimed to be due and which is actually due on said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of two-thousand one-hundred twenty-one and 45-100ths ($2,121.45) dollars. The mortgaged premises are described as follows:- Lot three (3) of section six (6), in township one-hundred fifty-five (155), north of range forty-three (43), and lot four (4) and the southeast quarter (SE 1-4) of the southwest quarter (SW1-4) of section thirty-one (31), in township one-hundred fifty-six (156), north of range forty-three (43), west of the Fifth Principal Meridian, in Marshall County, Minnesota.

That by virtue of a power of sale in said mortgage contained, and agreeable to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said premises at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Marshall Co., Minn. on Wednesday, the 23rd day of May, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren, Marshall County, Minnesota, to satisfy the amount then due thereon, taxes paid, if any, seventy-five ($75 00) dollars attorneys' fees together with the disbursements of these foreclosure proceedings.

Married

Miss Hilma Nyberg and Victor Johnson were united in marriage last Saturday, by Rev. Theo. Myhrer at the parsonage in Newfolden.

Immediately after the ceremony the wedding party consisting of bride and groom and the formers sister and friend, the Misses Albertina Nyberg and Swanhild Rasmussen, departed for Grand Forks for a short visit with Miss Gladys Hagen, returning to Holt Sunday evening.

This worthy couple number their friends by their acquaintances and The News joins all in extending to them a hearty much joy.

They will not go to housekeeping for the present while the groom has work on the dredge but will stay at her mother's home for the summer.

The Misses Gunhild Sollom and Albertina Nyberg were hostesses at a Nuptial shower given Miss Hilmer Nyberg last Thursday evening at the pleasant home of Mrs. A. L. Carlson. The surprise was well planned, for when Miss Nyberg returned from a joy ride to Middle River with Miss Gunhild and was usured into the front room which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, only to meet a bunch of young people assembled to do her honor, the surprise was so great that the first thot was a hasty retreat, but being so suddenly surrounded with happy and joyful greetings, the capitulation was complete. A very enjoyable evening was spent in various ways followed by a most delicious repast.

The honored guest was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts, which she will cherish with fond memories of the happy occasion.

As Miss Nyberg was a favorite not only with the young people but with the married ladies as well, a second surprise party was put in operation, chaperoned by Mrs. Hazel Olson, Mrs. Gladys Reierson, and Mrs. Edna Haggland, last Friday night at the home of her mother.

With well laden baskets and joy in the heart, the bunch unceremoniously walked in and took possession. Needless to say that the surprise of Thursday night was duplicated Friday night. The trio of entertainers planned to keep things humming and as it was a very informal party, it was rollicking fun from start to finish. Some beautiful presents were presented to the honored recipient. After a most delicious lunch was served, each one in turn before departing wished the bride to be, joy, happiness and blessings.

Will have a car of feed oats at the Holt Farmers Elevator first part of next week.

Mrs. Torger Ness is improving her residence property with a coat of paint. Rudolph Nyhus is doing the work.

Miss Olava Sollom who teaches at Angus and Miss Myrtle who attends school at Thief River Falls, both visited here Sunday with their sister, Mrs. A. L. Carlson and family.

Mrs. John Holst had the thumb and fore finger of her left hand badly crushed by the break of their windmill, last Friday. She was taken to the Thief River hospital where it was found her finger was so badly crushed that amputation was necessary.

When in town make the Holt Cafe your home, we want you to feel at home.

Children's Clinic

Preparations are being made for an Infants and Children Free Clinic to be held in the school basement on May 24th. under the auspices of the County Public Health Association. The clinic will begin at nine o'clock in the morning and continue until 4:30 in the afternoon, and will be conducted by a doctor who specializes in childrens diseases.

The clinic is free to everyone.

The clinic is scientific in nature and the doctor is there for the purpose of discovering physical imperfections and to give advice concerning them so that they can be corrected before they become permanent defects. The doctor will tell each mother the exact condition of her child, suggest the diet, make the diagnosis and leave to the parents the choice of any physician they may desire to do any prescribing or give the treatment necessary for the child.

WOMAN'S HEALTH RESTORED

She Claims Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did It After Everything Else Failed

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I feel that I ought to let you know about my case. I was ailing and could barely do my housework and washing I was so run-down, just from having one child. I took a lot of medicines and had doctors. Then I gave them all up and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel wonderfully good now. I do everything that comes along, and we all take your medicine as a tonic when we don't feel just so. I am thankful for what the Vegetable Compound has done for my health and for my family."—Mrs. MARY SAIECHECK, 944 28th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Letters like these testify to the value of the Vegetable Compound. These women speak from the fullness of their hearts. They describe as correctly as they can their conditions: First, those symptoms that affected them most conspicuously; and later the disappearance of those symptoms. They are sincere expressions of gratitude. For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so praised by women.

Slightly Significant.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

—17—

Miss Potter flushed, and without waiting for him to say more she interrupted, "I never heard a thing; not a thing."

Bartley studied her carefully as he asked, "Are you sure?"

Her face paled, then the color returned, but again she replied, "I heard nothing until that horrible cry rang out."

I saw her shudder as if the memory of it were almost too much for her, but she continued bravely, "I knew it was beside me, and I wondered what had happened. It frightened me—so much—that I can't tell just what happened after that."

She seemed to be telling the truth; yet I could not understand how anyone had gotten near enough to Briffeur to kill him without the person next to him hearing his approach.

Bartley toyed with a piece of paper a second, then smiled as he said, "Of course, the cry startled you, Miss Potter. But before or after it came, can you think of no little occurrence that might help us? Nothing at all?"

She was silent for a long time, then slowly, as if apologetic, she answered, "That is, I heard nothing, but—I did think I felt something brush my dress—on the side next to Briffeur. I am not sure, however. I only thought something did. The next moment I heard him slip to the floor and knew something was wrong."

Bartley's eyes brightened at her remark, and he asked eagerly, "Can you show us just where your dress was brushed?"

She hesitated as if trying to collect her thoughts, and glanced down at her dark brown dress. Then she placed her hand on a spot a little above her waistline. Bartley came to her side and looked closely at the place she indicated, then suddenly knelt, his eyes close to the cloth. Straightening up, he pointed out to us a small splotch, a little darker than the goods of which the dress was made. With a significant glance he said one word, "Blood!"

At the word, a look of horror came into Miss Potter's face and she shrank away.

"Was that stain on your dress when you put it on?" he asked as he rose to his feet.

"No! The dress was worn this afternoon for the first time since it was returned from the cleaner's."

He said nothing more, but went back to the desk. I presume that we were all wondering what the bloodstain indicated. The wild thought rushed over me that she might, after all, have killed Briffeur; but I dismissed it at once as impossible.

"Now, Roche," asked Bartley, "did you hear anything?"

Roche, of course, understood the importance of his answer; and his red face became cautious and his hands clenched. Then, very slowly, as if counting his words, he answered, "I don't know, Mr. Bartley, that I heard anything—that is, anything except the little sound the people behind me made when the lights went out. If you mean, did I hear any one creep up on that poor fellow, I did not. If anyone came near him, I should have at least heard something; but I did not hear anything like that."

"What did you hear?" asked Bartley, a shrewd smile on his face.

The chief actually blushed. In an apologetic tone he said, "Now—Mr. Bartley, I don't know if I heard anything. But I thought—"

"What did you think?"

Roche shrugged his shoulders, hesitated, then answered, "Why, I thought that, a second or so before he gave that cry, I heard—" He paused like a man who is afraid that what he is going to say will sound absurd. "I don't know just what to call it. It was very slight, more like a little thud. I could scarcely hear it. It sounded as if a small object had struck something."

The keen face of Bartley was eager, and he leaned forward, his eyes on Roche's face. "And that was just before he cried out?" he asked.

"Yes, only a second before. It was just after I thought I heard something else."

Bartley demanded, "What?"

The chief hesitated again, pausing as if to think out carefully what he wished to say.

"Why—Mr. Bartley, when that last clap of thunder came, I thought the house had been struck, and was so upset that I don't know if I really heard anything at all. What I thought I heard sounded like a bough moving in the wind, or the whir of a violin string."

His description was so vague that we looked at each other, puzzled. Bartley tried to make the chief more definite, but to all his questions he received the same reply. Roche was not sure if he had heard anything, but if he had, it had sounded like a bough in the wind. What it was, or what had caused it, he had not the faintest idea.

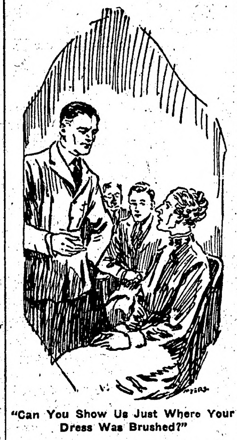
That was all he could tell us. That Briffeur could have been killed with Roche within a few inches of him—killed by some one who did not make a sound—seemed impossible. Yet it had been done. I concluded that the thud he had heard was the sound of the knife being driven into the body, but I could not account for the sound of the bough. The chief might have imagined that he heard it, or have been confused by the movements of the alarmed crowd behind him.

Bartley questioned the others. Ruth, her face pale, trembled a little as she answered that she had heard nothing but the cry. The district attorney replied that he had heard nothing else, either, and had not dreamed that a crime had been committed until he saw the figure on the floor. Doctor King's answer was similar. The impossible had happened. Briffeur had been murdered, not only without anyone near him hearing the murderer, but without his leaving any traces behind him.

As person after person denied having heard a sound, Bartley's face became grave. Later, he told me he agreed with my belief that the murderer could not have crept up on the chauffeur without making at least some slight noise. When all had finished, he gave a little shrug, and a faint smile came to his lips. I would have given a good deal to know what had caused it.

"Whoever struck that blow," Doctor Webster commented, "knew where to place it. The slightest fraction of an inch nearer, and the chauffeur would have died instantly. The darkness probably caused the murderer to miss the exact spot he was aiming for—the center of the heart."

Bartley agreed, and for a moment nothing was said. Then the district attorney broke the silence with, "Mr. Bartley, I think that Briffeur knew who killed him. At least, he had an idea who it was. He was trying to tell us when he died."



"Can You Show Us Just Where Your Dress Was Brushed?"

"Yes," Bartley replied, with a curious smile, "he was not only trying to tell us, but to point him out. You will remember that just before he died, in a last burst of strength, he half raised himself and said, 'Slyke murdered—I—killed—' and fell back dead. There is no doubt he thought he knew who killed him. He had not, of course, seen who it was. But he suspected some one, and was trying to point him out."

"Trying to point him out?" echoed the district attorney in astonishment.

"Yes, point him out. He pointed straight at Doctor Webster's chest."

The doctor started and his face reddened in surprise and anger. He glanced quickly at Bartley to discover if he were in earnest, and blurted out, "Me! My G—d, I never was anywhere near him!"

"I know that, Doctor," Bartley said, with a reassuring smile. "What I meant was that he was trying to point out some one; I doubt if he could distinguish one person from another. You happened to be unlucky enough to be in front of him, that is all."

"I am pretty sure he had no idea that he was pointing at me; and I doubt, for that matter, if he even knew what he was saying," Doctor Webster insisted.

"I agree with you in part, Doctor," was Bartley's answer. "I don't believe he had any idea whom he was pointing at; but I think he knew who killed him, nevertheless."

"But, Mr. Bartley," Ruth cried, wonderingly, "why should any one wish to kill our chauffeur?"

His answer came in a short sentence. "Because he knew who killed Mr. Slyke."

His reply, not unexpected by me, seemed to surprise the others. The girl looked bewildered and Doctor King's eyes opened wide. Miss Potter alone remained unmoved. Even the district attorney, lawyer that he was, demanded, "Why do you say that?"

Bartley glanced at him as if he had expected a man with legal training to have better understanding, and in a weary voice explained: "You all recognize that Briffeur was killed as he was about to testify. Whoever did the deed was afraid of what he knew. He could not, of course, have foreseen that the lights would go out; but when they did he seized the opportunity. He feared that the chauffeur would tell who killed Slyke. And while he might not have been able to prove his statement, he knew enough to be dangerous. For myself, I believe the chauffeur could have told us, and that he was killed to shut his mouth."

The district attorney made a little gesture of dissent. "I see that; but, on the other hand, how do we know that Briffeur himself did not kill Slyke? He said, you remember, 'Slyke murdered—I—killed—' Maybe he killed him himself."

Black nodded an emphatic agreement. This accorded with the theory he had advanced the night before. I could see that Bartley, however, was not convinced. As he made no comment, the attorney continued, "He said nothing more; but may we not say that, if he had finished the sentence, what he would have said would have been, 'Slyke murdered. I KILLED HIM'."

"Then why was the chauffeur killed?" Bartley asked with a sarcastic smile.

The lawyer shook his head slowly, and answered that he advanced his argument as a theory only.

"I have an idea," Bartley said, "that if the chauffeur had finished the sentence it would have been 'Slyke murdered. I know who did it'."

As I listened to both of their theories, one seemed to me just as likely to be correct as the other.

CHAPTER XI

In Which We Begin to Find a Motive.

Bartley had some work for me to do, and I did not dine until the others had finished. While I was eating, Currie wandered into the dining room and sat down beside me. The murder had taken all the life out of him. It was the first time that he had come so close to a crime. He seemed unable to forget the cry and those awful moments in the darkened room. We discussed the affair for a while; then I excused myself and went in search of Bartley.

I had been thinking for hours of the latest crime, and no solution had come to me. I could not understand how, in those few moments of darkness, the murderer had been able to approach the chauffeur near enough to kill him, nor why the people next to him had heard nothing.

When I told Bartley of my bewilderment, he answered with a little grin: "I agree with you, Pelt, it's very mysterious. It's the first time I ever heard of murder taking place at an inquest and in a room filled with people. There are no clues, apparently. To my mind, however, the real reason for the murder was to prevent Briffeur from testifying. Whoever killed him knew about what he would say, and feared that he would tell who had killed Slyke."

Breaking in on him, I said, "But he could not have foreseen that the lights would go out and give him a chance? I thought that it was the storm that extinguished them."

He nodded. "That's true enough. It was that last flash of lightning. Darkness was just what he needed, and he took advantage of it. He had several moments in which to act. There were not many people near enough to the chauffeur to have killed him in that short time."

He rose, went over to his bag and brought back the knife with which the murder had been committed. For several moments he examined it, then he asked as he passed it over to me, "What do you think of it?"

It was a rather odd knife. It resembled a hunting knife, and the edge showed it had had a good deal of use. The blade was very dull except at the point. It was too large to be carried in a man's pocket, but a woman could have hidden it somewhere in the folds of her clothing.

As Bartley seemed to expect some comment from me as I handed it back to him, I said, "Save for the fact it's not very sharp and seems to have been used a great deal, I can learn nothing from it."

He smiled as he turned the knife over and over in his hand. "Oh, there's more than that. It tells a great deal. The knife is unusual in shape and length. There was a time when it was used a great deal, and the owner kept it very sharp and clean. But for some time now he has neglected it. There is one very important thing that you have overlooked. You remember those little drawings I found on the magazine in Slyke's room, the row of connected circles? I find the same thing here."

I gasped, and, reaching for the knife, looked at the wooden handle. There, faintly scratched on the wood, were a number of circles running one into the other.

"Do you think," I asked in excitement, "that it is the sign of some secret society?"

Australia's "Model City."

Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, is a "model city," laid out with a central town in perfectly square blocks, containing public and business buildings. Outside of that is a belt of public parks and gardens and beyond the latter are the residence suburbs.

HARDING'S TRIP DECIDED UPON

President Will Tour Central Part of Country on Trip to Alaska.

ST. LOUIS FIRST STOP

Executive Is Planning Speeches for Cities He Will Visit—Will Discuss McCumber Tariff—Last Speech at San Diego.

Washington—Having virtually decided on the itinerary of his western trip, President Harding has begun to give considerable thought to the addresses he will make en route to the Pacific coast and in the coast states. The itinerary as now arranged provides for speeches in about 12 cities, the first in St. Louis and the last probably in San Diego, Cal.

First Stop at St. Louis.

The initial address in St. Louis, it is understood, will be of a general nature, somewhat of a preface to the others to come, but devoted in the main to a presentation of the president's views on the proposal for American membership on the permanent court of international justice. These views are expected to follow along the lines laid down by the executive in his New York address last month with the addition of new arguments in support of the proposal.

Passing on to Kansas City, the president, according to some of his advisers, will speak upon the transportation problem. In this address it is considered likely Mr. Harding will outline, at least in a preliminary way, the recommendations with respect to railroad legislation which he will make to congress next December. He also will discuss water transportation.

To Discuss McCumber Tariff.

The next address will be made at Hutchinson, Kan., and from present indications will be devoted to the general agricultural question, the president outlining what his administration has done for the farmers, with particular mention of the Fordney-McCumber tariff and credits legislation.

Speeches to be made at Denver, Salt Lake City, Boise, Idaho, and Helena, Mont., likewise will be on subjects of particular interest to those communities. As for Seattle, some of those who have talked recently with the president, understand he desires to announce in that city his new policy for Alaska as based on observations made during the more than two weeks he will spend there. This is contingent, however, on whether he returns to that city after his Alaskan trip or lands at Portland, Ore. In the latter case the Alaskan address will be made at Portland.

One of the addresses contemplated by the executive will deal with the results of the arms conference and he is said to feel that the logical place for such a speech would be a Pacific coast city, the west coast being particularly interested in the four-power treaty as well as many of the other conventions which resulted from the conference.

GERMANS ARE PESSIMISTIC

Replies From England and Italy End Teuton Hopes.

Berlin.—The prevailing mood in government circles was one of pessimism, and the same feeling was observable in the reichstag, where the political temper over the British and Italian replies to the German note on reparations found freer expressions than was encountered in official quarters.

Pessimism Prevails.

Neither government nor parliamentary leaders professed to see that any headway had been gained in current reparations discussions in consequence of the allied replies to Chancellor Cuno's recent notes. Some of the pessimists even declared that the impasse reached in the present exchange of notes across the frontier has only quickened the political and economic disaster with which Germany is threatened and that the acrimonious replies from Paris and the negative responses from Rome suggest the futility of further German offers no matter how precisely they are formulated.

No Cabinet Meeting Called.

Chancellor Cuno has not yet called in the cabinet for a formal survey of the situation, and it is not believed any decisive action will be taken before the week end in case the government decides to come forward with a fresh proposal.

Provincial Police Patrol Border.

Winnipeg, Man.—An army of provincial police with sharp shooters and bomb throwers, is being recruited by Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta to patrol the United States border where bandits have been finding refuge after terrorizing the countryside north of the line in numerous raids during the last year. The three provinces are reorganizing their police systems for the patrol and are joining forces in an effort to curb border outlaws, robbers and rum runners.

This smoker says Edgeworth gets better and better

But it doesn't—and no "improvements" are contemplated

To begin with, we had better quote Mr. Whitlock's letter in full. Not in a boastful spirit, but so we can refer back to it farther down in the column.

2844 Accomac Street,
St. Louis, Missouri

Larus & Brother Company,
Richmond, Va.
Gentlemen:

I wish to take this opportunity to tell you what I think of your Edgeworth Plug Slice Tobacco.

I have been a pipe smoker for about 18 years and during that time have naturally tried many different brands and blends of tobacco. I could not seem to find an ideal blend until about six months ago when, at the suggestion of a friend, I tried a pipe of Edgeworth Plug Slice.

I have been a constant user of Edgeworth since and can truthfully say that "Day by day in every way Edgeworth is getting better and better."

You have my permission to use this letter in any way you may desire if by so doing it will enable other pipe smokers to find a really cool, enjoyable and perfectly satisfactory man's smoke.

I beg to remain,
Edgeworthily yours,
Al. F. Whitlock.

We are indeed glad Edgeworth has given Mr. Whitlock such unqualified satisfaction, but we feel obliged to sidestep his suggestion that "day by day in every way Edgeworth is getting better and better."

Our constant aim is quite to the contrary.

Just as it is, Edgeworth pleases thousands and thousands of pipe smokers throughout the country.

If we should try to "improve" Edgeworth or change it in the least, we might be doing an injustice to the men who have smoked Edgeworth for years and years and who expect to find it always the same good smoking tobacco.

And so we hope Mr. Whitlock will agree with us that, all things considered, it is best for us to go on making more of the same Edgeworth.

To add to our list of friends we are always glad to send free samples to anyone who cares to send us his name and address.

Just drop us a postcard and we shall immediately forward to you generous helpings of both Edgeworth Plug Slice and Ready-Rubbed.

For the free samples address Larus & Brother Co., 73 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va. If you will also add the name and address of your tobacco dealer, we shall appreciate your courtesy.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your dealer cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

Los Angeles Woman Tells of Wonderful Experience.

MRS. GUSSIE E. HANSEN.

Mrs. Gussie E. Hansen, of 916 West 52nd Street, is now numbered with the multitude of Los Angeles men and women who have realized the wonderful merits of Tanlac. In relating her experiences, Mrs. Hansen said:

"It is wonderful what Tanlac will do for one suffering from stomach trouble, nervousness and run-down condition. I have tried it.

"Before taking the treatment everything I ate disagreed with me so that I actually dreaded to sit down to the table. I suffered from constipation, had awful pains across my back, and was so nervous and run down I was in misery all the time.

"Tanlac was helping so many others I thought it might help me, too, and it certainly has. Why, my appetite is just splendid, and my stomach is in such good order I eat to my heart's content. My back doesn't bother me any more, and I sleep like a child at night. I can't say too much for Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists—take no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Latest Overall Suit.

An overall suit which has no bibs, strings, suspenders, double folds, or buckles, is described in Popular Mechanics Magazine. The outfit, consisting of a jacket and trousers, can be fastened together with buttons and put on or taken off as a one-piece garment if desired. Under the waistband of the jacket are tabs which are buttoned to the trousers, thus forming a close and neat-fitting connection and making the garment practically dust-proof.

Labor —that's the Big Cost in Painting

LABOR accounts for about three-quarters of the entire cost of a painting job. Materials cost only about one-quarter—so the possible saving in cost between the best and the cheaper materials is not worth consideration.

And by specifying the best paint, and getting years of extra wear, you save the big labor cost of frequent re-painting. You get the most economical job in the end.

PATTON'S Sun-Proof PAINT

—is longer-lasting because it is richer in linseed oil. It will not peel or blister if applied to surfaces fit for painting. It forms a tough film of protection against time and weather.

—18—

"No. It's simply this—that most of us, if we have a pen or pencil in our fingers, draw figures on whatever happens to be at hand. We do it without thinking, because it is a subconscious act; and, as a rule, we draw the same set of figures each time. Some one, having nothing to do, idly scratched these figures on this knife handle, hardly conscious of what he was doing. I believe the same person made the figures on the magazine and on the knife."

"Why do you think that?" I asked.

"It had been scientifically proved that, when a person plays with a pencil and idly draws figures, he always draws the same ones; and that they are symbols of something deep in his subconscious mind. These circles are so much alike that I think they were drawn by the same person."

I had a dim idea I had heard something similar to what he was saying in college, but just what it was I could not remember. As I started to hand him the knife, it slipped through my fingers and fell to the floor and stood quivering, its point imbedded in the wood. With a sudden exclamation, Bartley picked it up and, to my astonishment, let it fall again and again. Each time the point stuck upright in the floor. Then he balanced it on his hand, smiling to himself. As he replaced it in his bag, he said, "I am glad you dropped that knife, Pelt."

It seemed to me such an inane thing to say that I made no comment. "We are going over to Slyke's again," he continued, "to see Miss Potter. By the way, there's another thing, Pelt, you can aid me a good deal by solving."

"What's that?" I said.

"Find out why that dog did not bark the night of the murder. It's a puppy, noisy and active, and does not like strangers. The person that killed Slyke, as far as we know, had to come down those long stairs and pass through the living room where the dog was. If it was some one from outside, that dog should have barked. But as far as we can find out, he never made a sound."

"It looks to me," I suggested, "as if the murder were committed by some one in the house."

Bartley did not answer until he had opened the door into the hall, then he paused to say, "There seems to be no motive for any of the family to have killed Slyke. The little difficulty between Miss Potter and Slyke does not seem important enough to consider. The will has been found and all the property is accounted for. His lawyer, you remember, discovered a large sum of money in the safe when it was opened." Then he proceeded downstairs.

It was only a short drive in Bartley's fast car to the Slyke house. He offered no explanation of our call, and I hid my curiosity as well as I could. As soon as the butler had gone, Bartley came at once to the object of his visit.

"Miss Potter," he said, "the butler testified this afternoon that he overheard words between Mr. Slyke and yourself. Would you mind telling me what they were?"

Her face flushed, but she kept her eyes on Bartley as she replied coldly: "The butler was mistaken. Mr. Slyke and myself never quarreled."

"Oh, I don't mean that you actually quarreled, but that you had some words."

Her eyes dropped under his searching gaze, and it was not until he had repeated his question a second time that she answered rather reluctantly: "There was no—no trouble. What the butler spoke of had nothing to do with Mr. Slyke's death."

Bartley noticed her hesitation, and asked suddenly, "Was it over his selling whisky?"

She started and her face paled, then flushed. In a low voice she demanded, "How did you know?"

"That is not of much importance, is it? I am right; that was what the words were about, wasn't it?"

She gave him an appealing look, then glanced back at the floor. At last she regained her composure, and, raising her eyes, answered, "Yes, that was what the butler heard us talking about. It was not a quarrel. I told him he would get into trouble over the whisky, and he told me it was none of my business."

"When did he start to sell it?"

She thought for a moment. "I am not sure. You see, I know very little about it. But before the prohibition law came into effect he bought a great quantity of whisky. He told me that a man who had whisky could make a lot of money. He got several truck loads, but where he kept it I don't know."

"And after prohibition, did he buy any more?" Bartley asked.

"I think so. I think it came from Canada. He told me once or twice that he was making a great deal of money out of it."

"And you quarreled over his selling it?"

Rather warmly she answered, "We never quarreled. It was not my affair. I felt bad, of course, that he should do a thing like that. I warned him that he would get into trouble, and he told me it was none of my business if he did. That must have been what the butler heard."

Bartley glanced sharply at her. "Have you any idea who helped him in it?"

"No—that is—I never knew. I did think that maybe—"

She stopped and Bartley suggested, "You thought it was the chauffeur?"

"Yes, I did. I know that Mr. Slyke bought a truck, and that the chauffeur would have long talks with him in his room, and then take the truck and be away for several days. In the last year or so he became overbearing, and I wondered why Mr. Slyke kept him—unless there was something between them."

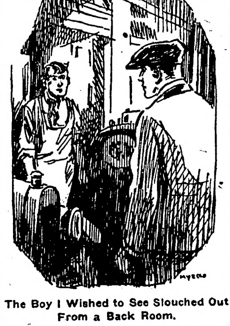
I was not surprised. Everything had seemed to lead up to this revelation. What I could not understand was why a man in Mr. Slyke's position should be engaged in the illegal selling of whisky, and take this chauffeur into his confidence. Whisky bought in any quantity, since prohibition, had to come from Canada, and passed through the hands of a number of men. Was his engaging in selling whisky a problem in itself, or had it some bearing on his death?"

Miss Potter had little more to tell us, and we rose to take our leave. As Bartley took his hat, he asked her if she had been using the ouija board.

She was at once excited, her eyes gleamed, and her voice rose as she responded: "Yes, I received a message from Mr. Slyke. I know it was from him. He has written twice, 'You will hear from me,' and I know I will. I am going to get a good medium to come and see what he wants to communicate to me."

To my surprise Bartley listened gravely, almost reverently. When she had finished, he said he knew of a very good medium and would try to arrange for him to come to the house for a seance if she desired. This proposal pleased Miss Potter very much, and she accepted at once. She told us that many people in Saratoga believed in spiritualism, including Doctor King. For a while they discussed various manifestations; and I listened to Bartley in astonishment, as he told of receiving messages from the dead, for I knew he did not believe in them.

We were interrupted by a knock, and the butler entered with a telegram for Bartley. It had been sent first to Currie's, and he had directed the boy to follow us to Slyke's.



The Boy I Wished to See Slouched Out From a Back Room.

Bartley tore open the envelope and ran his eyes over the paper. I saw him start, then without a word he handed it to me, and I read:

> Arrested in New York one o'clock this morning Jacob Asher with truck load of whisky. Claims he paid Slyke $23,000 for it afternoon before his death. Saw him about five o'clock. Did not know Slyke was dead till he read papers. Story seems to be true. ROGERS.

No wonder Bartley had started. Here at last might be a motive for the murder. Perhaps the man in New York could tell us what had happened that night.

With grave face Bartley took the telegram from my hand, and reread it; then he asked Miss Potter if Slyke had had a visitor the afternoon before his death. She said she did not know whether he had or not, as she had been away most of the afternoon. After a few more questions, we bade her good-night. In the doorway Bartley paused to say something to her, in so low a tone that I could not catch his words; but I did hear her eager answering "Yes."

As we climbed into the car and started down the road, I said that I did not suppose she knew anything about the $23,000 whisky deal. His answer was as quick as a flash: "I never thought she did. The strange thing is that in the safe, after his death, his lawyer should find $10,000, and that he should have made a deposit of $13,000 that same afternoon."

We rode in silence for a while. Then he startled me by saying that he was not going back to Currie's, but to New York to interview the man arrested with the whisky, and that he would not be back until the next afternoon. It was not until we were at the station, waiting for his train, that I interrupted his preoccupation to ask if he thought it would ever be discovered who had killed Briffeur.

The flickering lights above us cast weird shadows over his face, and it seemed to me that behind his half smile was a look of great sadness as he replied, "I know now who killed Briffeur."

"You do?" I gasped.

He answered slowly: "Yes. That was easy enough to discover. But to prove it before a jury will be almost impossible."

Just then the train came in and he said no more. On my way back to the house I pondered deeply over his last remark, but could find no clue to his meaning.

CHAPTER XII

In Which the Robbery Is Solved.

I had intended to spend the next morning in either fishing or playing golf. Bartley had left in such a hurry that he had given me no instructions as to what I was to do in his absence. But when I came down to breakfast, by my plate was a telegram from him, reminding me to see the boy in the garage and learn from him what he knew of the robbery. I had entirely forgotten the chauffeur's dying statement.

After a late breakfast, I took the car and drove once more to the Slyke house.

Leaving the car in the driveway in front of the house, I went around to the rear. The house appeared deserted, although it was the day of Slyke's funeral.

The garage was some yards from the house, half hidden among the trees. It was two stories high, built of stone, the upper story being used as living quarters for the men employed in it. The door stood open and I entered. Coming from the bright sunlight into the darkened room, it was several moments before I could see clearly enough to make out that it was occupied by a large touring car, two small runabouts and a large truck. There was no one in sight, and after waiting a moment, I called loudly. The boy I wished to see slouched out from a back room.

He was about eighteen, with heavy figure, red face and unbrushed hair. His suit was dirty with oil from the cars. If he wondered what I wanted, he gave no sign of it. His eyes met mine clearly and honestly, as if he had no secrets to hide.

At first he stoutly denied that he knew anything at all about the robbery. He seemed to have the idea that I thought he was implicated in it. All he admitted knowing was a bit of gossip that he had picked up around the house at the time it was committed. The more I questioned him the more he insisted that he knew nothing about it, and I almost believed him. But the chauffeur, at the point of death, had said, "Ask the boy." It stood to reason then that he must know something of importance. At last I told him that the chauffeur had insisted that he knew, and asked if anyone had ever told him anything about the crime. A startled look came into his face; and he turned to me excitedly, his words tumbling over each other.

"Maybe that's what he meant. But, good Lord, I thought it was a joke, darned if I didn't. I thought he was kidding me; he was drunk, you know."

"Who was drunk?" I asked.

"Briffeur. He was very drunk, sir. You see, you asked me did I know anything about those men breaking into Slyke's, and I didn't; but Briffeur told me one night—"

He paused.

"Go on," I commanded.

"It was one night soon after the trial. Briffeur came drifting in here, pretty well lighted up. When he was that way, he used to talk a lot; but he never told the truth at such times, as I'd often found out. He never knew afterward what he had been saying. He would tell awful yarns about women, and the like. No one ever believed him."

I brought the boy to the point by asking what it was the chauffeur had told him. He hesitated, then in a voice that showed that he thought what he was going to say was almost too foolish to mention, he added, "He got to talking about that robbery, and said it was to laugh, the way the trial had gone. That no one knew that he had committed the robbery—no one except himself and one other. I thought, of course, it was one of his wild yarns, and laughed at him. When I asked him why he did it, he said Slyke owed him lots of money, and that he was after it."

It was natural that the boy should have thought this conversation of no more importance than many others of the chauffeur, when he was drunk and boasting about things that had never happened.

The chauffeur, he said, had come into the garage, "lit up like a battleship." The talk had veered around to the robbery, and he had boasted that the two men were in jail for the robbery that he himself had committed. Who had helped him, he did not say. He claimed that Slyke owed him "lots of money." It seemed absurd that a wealthy man like Slyke should owe his chauffeur money and not pay it. He had even boasted that the evidence against the men in prison was arranged by himself.

Oklahoma City—Governor J. C. Walton declared that martial law will be employed in Oklahoma if authorities cannot curb mob whipping and violence.

Newport, Ky.—More than 20 families were made homeless and property damage estimated at $125,000 was caused by fire which destroyed a city block here.

Chicago—Samuel J. "Nails" Morton, who a year ago was tried for the murder of two policemen and acquitted by a jury, was killed here when he fell from a horse on which he was riding in Lincoln park.

Phoenix, Ariz.—Arrested on suspicion of being Andrew L. Helper, wanted in Butler, Pa., on a charge of embezzling $200,000 a man who thus far has insisted that his name is L. H. White, was later turned over to department of justice officers.

Thompson, Ga.—Mrs. Thomas E. Watson, widow of the late United States senator from Georgia and the first American woman to whom an appointment in the senate was ever offered, died from an attack of acute diabetes.

Toledo—Nathaniel Curwin Wright, aged 53, for 15 years editorial manager of the Toledo Blade, is dead. Mr. Wright served as field correspondent for the Associated Press in the Spanish-American war. It was he who wrote the vivid and famous story for the Associated Press of the sinking of Admiral Cervera's fleet in Santiago bay.

Chicago—A continuous day and night postal service between New York and San Francisco will become a reality in July or August according to air mail service attaches here.

Sporting

Chicago—"Cy" Williams, veteran outfielder of the Philadelphia Nationals, is having a runaway race for homerun hitting honors in the major leagues. The tribe of Williams is doubly honored, however, as Kenneth Williams of the St. Louis Browns tops the American league circuit clouters.

New York—Jess Willard and Luis Angel Firpo, being the only heavyweight championship contenders who contrived to remain in a vertical position for the duration of the Milk Fund show, will be asked by Tex Rickard to embellish the dotted line of a contract, calling for them to meet in a ring on June 30.

Salt Lake City, Utah—Asserting that he was not surprised at the outcome of the Willard-Johnson fight in New York, which Willard won in the eleventh round, Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion, hailed the former champion as "one of the greatest ring masters in the game." "Willard is fast and powerful, and when he is in proper condition, I consider him a wonderful fighter. I am not at all surprised at the results."

Shelby, Mont.—Jack Kearns left New York for Salt Lake to meet Champion Jack Dempsey and proceed to Great Falls, Montana, where they will open a training camp to prepare for Jack's battle with Tom Gibbons at Shelby July Fourth. Gibbons will train at Havre, Montana. The building of the arena is well under way. Two hundred men are on the job. Foreign Berlin—An eastern dispatch said Frau Bertha Krupp Von Bohlen, wife of the president of the Krupp works, has received orders to evacuate her Huegel villa in four days.

Paris—Senator Hiram Johnson traveled incognito through the Ruhr but refused to discuss what he saw upon arrival here. Senator Johnson is going to London shortly.

Rome—Nine dead and seven severely wounded is the result of an explosion aboard a submarine chaser at Taranto. Shells were being handled aboard the ship. One was dropped and exploded. The chaser was heavily damaged.

Paris—A gale smashed several of the 20 special balloons entered for the Grand Prix of the Aero club of France. The others sailed toward Germany and Russia, where the pilots would be subject to arrest if they descended.

Berlin—Permission for sunbaths is among the demands of striking prisoners at the Brandenburg jail as presented to Minister of Justice Zehnhoff by the prisoners committee. The revolters declare they want to build long arm chairs in which they can stretch out in the sunlight when not working.

Commercy, France — France will stay in the Ruhr until she is paid, Premier Poincare said in an address here. The premier did not refer to the notes which are being sent the Berlin government by Great Britain and Italy, but he emphasized his determination to stick firmly to his previously announced policy.

Toulouse—Joseph Caillaux, former premier, was attacked with canes and blackjacks by members of a crowd which surrounded him in front of the Chamber of Commerce building here. He was injured about the head and was taken to a hospital, but later to his hotel, where his condition was reported not serious. There has been much feeling in France against Caillaux since the war.

Warsaw—The Polish government handed the soviet representative a sharp note demanding to know if Russia intends to keep her obligations or not. The execution of the Russian obligations to Poland must begin at once, the note declares. The dispute arises over the clauses in the Riga peace treaty guaranteeing Poland 20,000,000 gold rubles ($10,000,000).

Paris—The bank clerks and messengers' strike is on and American tourists, beginning to arrive in floods, will be inconvenienced by the situation, as it is not likely that the strike will end soon. The workers demand a minimum wage of $32 monthly. The banks refuse to consider this figure and the strike already is spreading to American as well as French banks.

Paris—Napoleon's bay mare, which he is supposed to have ridden in the battle of Waterloo, has just been discovered among the miscellaneous odds and ends of the Louvre museum. After the final fall of Napoleon, the mare was bought by an Englishman named Gleaves, who kept it until it died and then had it stuffed and presented to the Manchester Natural History museum in 1842.

PRAYING BY PROXY.

From October to February, there is a long line of dirty travelers making their way to the top of the sacred mountain of eastern Tibet. Each one prays as he travels, the prayer consisting of whirling a small cylinder of metal mounted upon a stick. At intervals there are larger cylinders which they whirl as they pass. The mountain is 12,000 feet high and the climb is hard, but the descent is said to be just as difficult.

Soften Hard Water.

Where the ordinary water is hard get a barrel and fill it half full of wood ashes. Then add water to the brim. This makes lye, and a gallon of this in a large kettle of hard water will make it as soft as rain water.

Coal Found in America in 1669.

Father Hennepin discovered coal in 1669 near the present site of Ottawa, Ill., and this appears to be the first record of the finding of coal in America, but it was not mined until nearly a century and a half later.

E. Tustin Montague Pours Out Gratitude to Tanlac.

Summing up his enthusiastic statement of the benefits he has received from Tanlac, E. Tustin Montague, a printer, of 20 S. 10th St., Minneapolis, Minn., made these characteristic remarks: "Tanlac has well merited all its praise, and I'd be glad for my testimonial to be published broadcast, so everybody may know about this remarkable medicine."

"I lost my appetite, my stomach went bad, and I began to suffer a great deal with indigestion. I thought my trouble would go away, but it got worse instead, and I was sometimes so weak, nervous and worn out I felt like I would never get through the day.

"But since taking Tanlac I have gained ten pounds, can eat anything, and rush jobs are a picnic for me. I used to fear I was near a breakdown, but that fear is gone now, for I am simply feeling fine. I am Tanlac's friend for life."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Simple Explanation.

The senator was somewhat peeved, yet the matter was one of no great consequence, as his friend pointed out. It seems that a constituent from the back districts had written the statesman a letter in which said writer alluded to said statesman as a "lawnmaker."

The senator averred that if a joke was intended it was a poor one. But his friend maintained that no joke was intended.

"Your constituent probably wants some free seed; that's all."

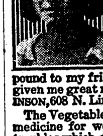
BACK ACHED TERRIBLY

Mrs. Robinson Tells How She Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Amarillo, Texas.—"My back was my greatest trouble. It would ache so that it would almost kill me and I would have cramps. I suffered in this way about three years; then a lady friend suggested that I try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had better health since, keep house and am able to do my work. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends as it has certainly given me great relief."—Mrs. C. B. ROBINSON, 608 N. Lincoln St., Amarillo, Tex.



The Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for women. It relieves the troubles which cause such symptoms as backache, painful times, irregularity, tired and worn-out feelings and nervousness. This is shown again and again by such letters as Mrs. Robinson writes as well as by one woman telling another. These women know what it did for them. It is surely worth your trial.

Housewives make a great mistake in allowing themselves to become so ill that it is well-nigh impossible for them to attend to their necessary household duties.

GREECE WOULD FIGHT TURKEY

Prefer War to Angora Capital Terms—Army is Wholly Reorganized.

MOSLEMS REINFORCING

Turks' Claim for Indemnity Is Denied by Athens Delegates at Parley —Prepare to Withdraw From Lausanne.

Lausanne—If Turkey insists on war to settle the question of the indemnity she claims is due from Greece, then Greece will accept the gage of battle M. Alexanderis, the Greek foreign minister, told the foreign correspondents.

The Greek delegates, he added, will be withdrawn from the Near Eastern conference this week if Turkey persists in her reparation demands.

The Turks have given no indication of an intention to recede from their reparation demands, and M. Alexandris' declaration that Greece was resolved not to pay once cent of indemnity brought increased pessimism in conference circles.

Greek Army Reorganized.

The Greek foreign minister denied that he had come to Lausanne in a bellicose mood but said the Greek army had been reorganized since the overthrow of Constantine, and now well equipped and armed, and able to care for itself.

"I think," he said, "if the worst comes to the worst, the Greek army will be able to defend its honor."

M. Alexandris added that he would like the American people to realize Greece's position, especially that, although Greece had numerous provocations which would reasonably justify her in reopening the war with Turkey, she had ignored them all because she was sincerely desirous of peace.

Turks Reinforce Army.

The seizure by the Turks of the impoverished refugees' funds in the banks of Constantinople, continued the foreign minister, and the abominable treatment of Greek prisoners of war recently arrived from Asia Minor constituted such provocations. The Greeks and Turks had signed a separate convention at Lausanne in January for the compulsory exchange of populations, with the distinct provision that it should be inoperative before May 1, yet the Turks have sent an additional 70,000 refugees since the signature of the convention, in gross violation of its terms.

The allies, as well as Greece, had protested, but Turkey sent still another boatload of 3,000. The latest provocation, according to M. Alexandris was the steady dispatch of Turkish troops into eastern Thrace, violating the Mudania armistice.

"I have just received a telegram from Athens," he added, "that on Saturday 7,000 additional crossed the straits as reinforcements to the Turkish army already mobilized in Thrace."

TEXAS MAN SUCCEEDS DAY

Washington—Partial reorganization of the mixed claims commission, constituted to adjudicate war claims totaling $1,479,000,000 of the United States government and American citizens against Germany, was caused by the retirement of former Justice Day of the supreme court as umpire of the commission.

Judge Edwin B. Parker of Texas, American member of the commission, was appointed immediately by President Harding to succeed Mr. Day as umpire, leaving the post of American commissioner temporarily vacant.

The resignation of M. Day, who told the president he wished to be relieved of his duties because he believed a younger and stronger man should serve as umpire, came as the commission was beginning to consider the 12,416 claims filed. The commissioners representing the United States and Germany, respectively, Judge Parker and Dr. Wilhelm Kiesselbach, already had begun hearings on the Lusitania claims. These had been presented last week by Robert C. Morris, American agent, and Marshall Morgan, counsel for the commission in charge of the Lusitania claims.

Little delay in disposal of the Americans' claims, officials said will result from the commission's personnel change. President Harding is expected to appoint a new American commissioner promptly and in the meantime the American agent, Mr. Morris and his staff will proceed with preparation of test cases for presentation to the commission.

Overseas Women Seek Members

Fargo, N. D.—Organized in Fargo last January, the Dakota unit of the Women's Overseas Service League, an organization of women who served overseas in any branch of war work, is staging a campaign for new members, it has been announced. There are 13 members in the Dakota unit at present and it is planned to greatly increase the membership before the national convention is held at Chicago June 14 to 17. Of the 25,000 women who served overseas, only 3,000 belong to the league.

Bar Bulldog Statue.

Prospects of Yale's traditional bulldog appearing on the campus in bronze disappeared with the announcement by the Yale Daily News that 23 of 25 class secretaries canvassed were opposed to the prospect. Caustic comment on the esthetic effect of placing the bulldog's statue on the campus with that of Nathan Hale and other famous Yale men accompanied most of the letters. It had been proposed that alumni raise $8,000 for a statue of the bulldog.

Death of Levor Olson

Levor Olson was born in Telemarken, Norway, November 20th. 1839, and died at the home of his son, Sam Groven, on May, 25th. 1923, after a long sickness due mostly to his advanced age.

Rev. Raaum conducted funeral services at the home Monday forenoon, and at the Holt Mission church in the afternoon and the interment was made in the Holt cementery. Those present at the funeral from a distance were his sons Halvor Olson of Elbow Lake, Ole Olson of Middle River, and granddaughter, Miss Gladys Hagen of Grand Forks.

Mr. Olson was united in marriage in 1858 with Miss Gunhild Aasen, and in 1870 they immigrated to America and settled in Waseca county, Minn. Later they moved to Steele county and from there to Grant county. In 1890 they moved to Marshall county and Mr. Olson hometeaded the northwest quarter of section 21 in Holt township, where they lived for several years. Mrs Olson died about fourteen years ago and he had made his home with his sons since that time.

Bad Character Caught

Carlson's store at Middle River was robbed Monday night of about $300.00 worth of clothing and some other merchandise. Sheriff Hanson was notified Tuesday morning. He got on the trail of the robber and captured him single handed, the same night, at the Paul Hoffman farm southeast of Holt. The sheriff came upon his man by surprise as he was washing auto, which it is believed he stole from a lady in Wisconsin. He is wanted for robberies in Kittson county, and is belived to have been connected with several bank robberies in Canada. Much credit is due Sheriff Hanson and Deputies Borderwick and Anderson, all of whom were on the trail, for capturing this robber.

It seems that the morning after the robbery he had gone to the post office for the mail, and a copy of the Boston Evening Times, a paper to which Slyke did not subscribe, had been handed to him by mistake. He had been reading a book only a few days before, "filled with murders and the like," and he remembered the account of a robbery in it and how the evidence was manufactured. On his way home he stopped at the police station for information, and offered to drive the police out to the home of the men who had been arrested. It seems that the state police had taken them to their own homes and allowed one of the men to change his coat before taking him to jail. The local police wanted to search the coat which had been left behind. It was here that the chauffeur had his first idea of planting the evidence. He tore the corner off the paper, and at the man's house managed to slip the newspaper into the pocket of the coat before the police examined it. Later, at Slyke's, he threw the little torn piece of paper on the floor so that they could find that, too.

When he had finished, I wondered if the boy had not been right when he thought that the man had been simply fooling him. But if it were true, his story, taken with the dying words of the chauffeur, would be enough to free the men in prison. I decided to take him with me to the police station and let him tell his story to Roche.

On our arrival in Saratoga we were lucky enough to find both Roche and Black together. Without any comment on my part, I had the boy repeat his story to the two officers. They listened with a good deal of interest. Roche, of course, had handled the robbery, and knew more about it than Black; but Black, I knew, believed that Briffeur was the murderer of Slyke, and the boy's story confirmed his belief.

We debated the story for an hour, Roche taking the view that the chauffeur might have been fooling the boy, and Black that the chauffeur had told the truth and was too drunk to realize what he had said.

Roche clinched his argument by demanding, "Why, under heaven, should Slyke owe Briffeur a large sum of money?"

That was, we all agreed, the weak point in the story.

"My Lord," Roche exclaimed as a thought occurred to him, "do you realize that it was Briffeur that found the torn pieces of cloth on the rose bush, the piece that fitted into the man't pants?"

In astonishment I asked, "It was?"

"It sure was. He came into the police station a few days later with it and told us where he had discovered it, and asked if we knew what it was. We found later that it fitted into a hole in the pants one of the fellows was wearing."

"Was he ever in the cell with those men?" Black asked, with a glance at me.

"Yes, several times. Slyke asked that we let him go in and talk to them."

Black threw out his hands in disgust. "My G—, Roche, one would think you kept a hotel. You let anyone go in and out that wanted to."

Roche flushed, and replied angrily, "Well, Slyke had lots of pull here, and I don't think it did any harm to let his chauffeur see those men."

"None," said Black dryly. "It only gave him a chance to snip a piece from one of the men's trousers."

"That's foolish," Roche laughed.

"Oh, I don't know," was Black's answer. "You can't prove he did not. You never saw the piece of cloth until he brought it in to you. He was in the cell alone with them, and had the chance to cut out the piece of cloth. You can't prove that the chauffeur's story is not true. It fits in better with facts than the evidence that sent those men to jail. But, oh boy, the easy way you run this jail!"

Roche scowled at us, and was about to retort when he was called from the room. Black and I lighted cigars and smoked in silence.

"Mr. Pelt," he asked at last, "what do you think of my theory that Briffeur murdered Slyke?"

I had given little thought to the matter, and said as much. Black surprised me by adding, "You know that Doctor King and the district attorney think that the only verdict that can be brought in in the Slyke case is suicide?"

Black's remarks astonished me. True, I realized that it was almost impossible to present convincing legal proof that Slyke had been murdered, but there was still the chauffeur's death to be explained. If he had been killed, as Bartley thought, because he knew too much about Slyke's death, then it seemed to me that to bring in a verdict of suicide would be impossible. I told Black of this objection, and he agreed with me.

Then he reiterated his belief in Briffeur's guilt. According to him the story the chauffeur told the boy fitted in well with his own theory. True, there was little to base it on, so far as evidence went; but, assuming that Slyke and the chauffeur had quarreled about money, his strongest bit of evidence was Briffeur's coming to the vault where the missing revolver was hidden. No one else, so far as we knew, had quarreled with Slyke, or had any reason for wanting to kill him. Black explained the chauffeur's death by saying Miss Potter had killed him. I told him this last disproved his first theory, that whoever had killed the chauffeur had done so because he knew too much about Slyke's death.

I found that it was nearly four o'clock, and as I had had no luncheon I decided to get something to eat before Bartley's train came in. Just as I reached the door Black called after me, "Say, Pelt, what does your chief want us all over for, to Slyke's tonight?"

This was the first time that I had heard we were expected to go there; and, seeing my astonishment, he added that Bartley had sent word for Roche and himself to be at Slyke's promptly at eight o'clock. I was forced to admit that I did not know as much about it as he did.

I went to a little tea room on the main street, and had almost finished my meal when someone called my name, and a reporter from the Record, whom I knew, rose and joined me. He mentioned the Slyke case and said that everyone was waiting for Bartley to "spring something." He complained that there was little enough information to be gotten about it. All he had been able to do had been to interview the men that had been at Slyke's home the night of his death. One of them told him, however, that three or four times during the evening Slyke had tried to reach someone on the 'phone—just who, he did not know.

I had now barely time to reach the station before Bartley's train pulled in, and I bade him a hurried farewell.

As Bartley and I drove down the main street of Saratoga, he said, "By the way, Pelt, stop at a store and get me five slates."

"Five what?" I asked.

He grinned. "Five slates. The kind used years ago in school. I want them all the same size."

He threw back his head and laughed. "They are usually used to write on, Pelt, but you will find out tonight what I want them for."

I stopped at a little stationery store, and returned in a moment with five slates. As I was getting back into the car, I remembered what the reporter had told me about Slyke's trying to get someone on the telephone, and I repeated his story to Bartley. He said nothing for a moment, then asked me to drive to the telephone exchange. He spent ten minutes in the building; and, when he came out, he seemed well pleased with his visit but did not mention its result.

As we drove along I told him the boy's story. When I had finished he smiled. "I believe the chauffeur told the boy the truth. He had been drinking, but that is when a man ofter speaks the truth."

I glanced at him to see if he were in earnest, and he nodded. "Yes, I am serious. Briffeur had broken into Slyke's house. He never spoke of this crime, but he thought a good deal about it. When he got drunk, his subconscious mind told the secret that he was trying to hide. I believe that what Briffeur said was the truth about the robbery."

"But why should he try to rob Slyke?" I asked.

"I am not sure. My theories are beginning to make a more or less connected whole, but there are still some gaps to be bridged."

Currie heard the car as it stopped before the house and came out to greet Bartley. As Mrs. Currie was in town, we did not change for dinner. During the meal the murder was not mentioned. Bartley went to his room immediately afterward. I sat with Currie for a while, smoking; then I excused myself. I was eager to learn what Bartley had discovered in New York. I found him in his room, stretched out in a big armchair, one leg thrown over its arm, his pipe in his mouth. As I watched him I thought how little one would suppose that he was engaged in solving two mystifying murders. He looked up as I entered, smiled, and went back to his reading.

"How did your trip come off?" I asked.

"Well, Pelt," he drawled, as he placed his long yellow-covered book on the floor, "Arentino certainly knew the criminal life of his day."

His remark had, of course, to do with the book that he had been reading, and nothing with my question. Seeing my disappointment, he laughed. "The trip wasn't of much importance. The man did buy the whisky from Slyke. He had bought all that was in the vault, but had only removed one truck load when he was caught. He paid $23,000 for it that afternoon, and left on the seven o'clock train for New York. His alibi is perfect; he knows nothing about the murder. The alibi of the men on the truck also is perfect. They did not reach Saratoga until noon on the day after Slyke's death. They dealt only with one man."

"One man?" I echoed. "Who?"

He watched my face for a moment, then replied simply, "Briffeur!"

I had half expected that answer. It made the chauffeur's story that Slyke owed him money seem reasonable. It even hinted that the chauffeur had tried to blackmail Slyke, and made Black's theory that Briffeur had killed Slyke seem not unreasonable.

"The men on the truck," Bartley continued, "did not know Briffeur's name; but their description of the man who unlocked the door of the vault for them fitted Briffeur."

"But—" I ventured.

"But what?" he countered.

"That connects Slyke and Briffeur."

He was silent for a moment, his face grave. Then he said slowly, "Yes, Pelt, it does. If the chauffeur had not been killed himself, he would be suspected of causing Slyke's death. But there is one thing—"

"And what is that?" I asked.

"Briffeur said some one else was implicated in that robbery. What I want to know is, who was that other man." He paused, then added: "There is no doubt, Pelt, that Slyke had been selling whisky for some time. Where he got it, and who was in on it with him, we don't know. Maybe tonight we can find out."

Currie's voice called from below that the car was waiting to take us to Slyke's house, and we rose. As I started for the door, Bartley handed me a package and gave me a playful shove.

"Don't drop them," he laughed.

I gave him a disgusted look. "But these are the slates."

"So they are, but they may talk for us tonight."

And with that absurd suggestion in my ears, I went down the stairs to join Currie.

CHAPTER XIII

Out of the Darkness.

The butler seemed to expect us, and showed us at once into the large room in which the inquest had been held. Bartley placed his bag and the package of slates on a small table in the center of the room, Roche sat down heavily in a chair, and the rest of us stood until Miss Potter entered. She seemed to be expecting us also, and for the first time, since I had met her, seemed almost at her ease. As she greeted us, the bell rang, and a moment later the butler ushered in Doctor King. He glanced at Bartley, then gave us all a word of greeting.

We seated ourselves around the table with the exception of Bartley, who remained standing at one end. He was a different Bartley from the one who had laughed and joked with us during the past few days. His face was stern, and his tired eyes glanced from one to the other of us soberly. The butler brought in a glass of water and placed it on the table.

Bartley waited until he had left the room again before he spoke, his voice low and hesitating:

"I have brought you here tonight at Miss Potter's request. She believes that it is possible to get in touch with the spirits of the dead, and that we may receive a message from Mr. Slyke that will tell us who killed him. She has asked us to be present as witnesses."

Currie looked at me as if he thought that Bartley had gone crazy. I was too surprised to offer an excuse. A glance at Bartley showed that he was in earnest, and I sank back in my chair, bewildered. I knew that he did not believe in spiritualism, though he was familiar with the question from all sides and had made a special study of it. I was puzzled as to why he should stoop to this pretense. Doctor King seemed more surprised than any of us; after a startled look at Bartley, he shrugged his shoulders and whispered something to Roche, who in turn shook his head.

"While I was in New York," Bartley continued, "I arranged for a certain medium, who is claimed to have had wonderful results, to meet us here tonight. I did not tell him what we expected, or anything about the circumstances. He will be here in a few moments. Meanwhile I am going to try a little experiment of my own."

He paused, then continued: "You know it is believed by thousands that messages from the spirit world ar written on slates by unseen hands. The test of the genuineness of such messages is the absence of an opportunity for fraud on the part of the medium, and the fact that it is in the handwriting of the person who is believed to be sending them. If these tests are met, we can then assume that the message was not the work of the medium, but comes from outside sources. I have a number of slates here, and am going to try to secure a message on them. I am not sure if I can do it, however."

BUSINESS GOOD IN NORTHWEST

Prices of Grain and Livestock Reached Higher Levels During Past Month.

DEPOSITS TOP LOANS

Financial Receipts Normal While the Receipts of Grain Are Abnormal According to the Report of Federal Agent Rich.

Fargo, N. D.—Trade and manufacturing production in the Ninth federal reserve district continues at levels higher than a year ago, according to the report of John H. Rich, federal reserve agent of the district in his monthly report on crop and business conditions.

"If price increase be included," says the report "the improvement amounts to about 17 per cent."

"On the other hand," the report continues, those statistical indexes of business which show improvement in April over March recorded less advance than the normal seasonal increases of former years, except in retail trade, which always lags after other trade indexes. There were some substantial declines recorded in April. This was due partly to the backwardness of the season with its late cold rains retarding plowing and seeding, and partly to the hesitation of buyers awaiting the outcome of the next crop.

"The median prices of grains and all livestock, except calves and lambs, rose during the month in spite of the fact that receipts, except corn, at terminal markets were above normal or above last year.

"Banks in the larger cities report a decline in deposits and the simultaneous liquidation of some of their investment holdings. Interest rates were firm or rising for the great majority of varieties of paper quoted in the local money market.

Financial Developments.

"The financial development in the northwest during April and the first half of May have been seasonal. There has been some decline in deposits without an equivalent decline in loans, but the developments are not at all alarming, since deposits continue to be larger than loans. During April, 30 selected city member banks experienced a decline of more than five millions in demand deposits, partly offset by an increase of one and three-fourths millions in time deposits.

"Loans were as large in volume at the end of the month as at the beginning, and to allow for the withdrawal of deposits, security holdings were reduced $2,500,000, reserves declined more than $1,000,000 and borrowings from this bank increased almost $2,500,000.

LIGNITE TO CUT FUEL COST

A. C. Stoker Shows Saving of 30 Per Cent Over Eastern Coal.

Bismarck, N. D.—With tests by experts showing that under new methods of burning lignite coal, the cost of fuel in state institutions may be materially lowered, the state board of administration has authorized its architects to draw plans for equipping a large boiler unit at the state hospital for the insane at Jamestown with automatic stokers, R. B. Murphy, chairman of the board recently announced.

At the same time a report of experts on the results of the automatic stoking system installed at the agricultural college during the winter as the result of an emergency appropriation by the legislature, was made public.

The results, in the opinion of members of the state board of administration, are of vast importance in the developing of the lignite industry in North Dakota, as well as effecting a considerable saving to the state. If the performance in the test unit at the Agricultural college is duplicated a saving of probably $10,000 a year in fuel will be effected at the insane hospital as well as a reduction in the cost of operation.

Report on A. C. Tests.

Summarizing the results of the Fargo experiment, Leopold Pistner, of the Fuel Economy and Engineering company who supervised the installation and tests of the stoker at the Agricultural college, declared that "the results obtained at Fargo render it certain that the use of midwestern coals in North Dakota will shortly be a thing of the past, that the extension of lignite to the western part of Minnesota, as standard fuel for that section, will rapidly take place, and that within two years, or as soon as the necessary mechanical changes can be made in various industrial plants, the use of lignite will be standard practice for that area as well as for North Dakota."

Reds, Workers Clash in Ruhr.

Werden—Seven persons have been killed and 93 wounded in clashes between civilians and volunteer police on the one side, and Communists on the other at Bochum which seems to be the storm center of the disturbances in the Ruhr. Firemen and police are marooned in fire headquarters and armed only with revolvers, while the Communists possess rifles and are well organized. Private advices by telephone indicate that the rioting continues with extreme violence.

VENUE CHANGE IN FLOGGER TRIAL

State Scores First in Arguments Preceding Higginbo.ham Murder Case.

NO DATE SET AS YET

Defense Attorney Scores Newspapers —Says Grimson Seeks Evidence— Trial Will Be Held in June at Lake City.

Cross City, Fla.—Trial of Thomas Walter Higginbotham, convict whipping boss, probably will be held in Lake City in June, it was announced here by court officials.

With the date remaining to be set, the trial of Walter Higginbotham, on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the death of Martin Tabert of North Dakota, in a Dixie county convict camp, will be held in the near future at Lake City, Columbia county.

The prosecution won a change of venue after both sides had presented affidavits relative to the possibility of Higginbotham securing a fair trial in Dixie county.

The Putnam Lumber company held the center of the arguments, the state contending that it owned more than half of the land in the county; that it paid 65 per cent of the county taxes, and that it had powerful political influences. The defense contended the lumber company did not figure whatsoever in the case; that Higginbotham has not been in the employ of the company since February 5, 1922, five days after Tabert is alleged to have died, and that neither the company nor its officials could interfere with the defendant getting a fair trial here.

Stafford Caldwell, assistant state's attorney, presented an affidavit during the afternoon session to refute the document offered by the defense and signed by 85 citizens that the defendant could receive a fair and impartial trial.

Mr. Caldwell, in concluding his argument, declared that Dixie county was not equipped with a courthouse and had no facilities for conducting court. Should the court overrule the state's motion, he said, it would be greatly handicapped in handling a drawn out trial, as is indicated the Higginbotham case will be.

Grimson Hunting Evidence.

L. E. Wade, representative in the Florida legislature, and leading counsel for the defense, scored the newspapers and attacked the presence of G. Grimson, assistant attorney general of North Dakota, who has been investigating the Tabert case for some time. He declared that the North Dakotan was here primarily to secure evidence on which to base a suit for damages against the Putnam Lumber company.

The legislator also attacked the Florida legislature for the attention given to the convict reform at this session.

ATTEMPT CAPTIVES' RESCUE

Crisis Approaches When Troops and Bandits Clash.

Peking.—Machine guns and rifles are attempting to force the release of 14 foreigners, including six Americans, held by Chinese bandits in the hills above Licheng.

For three weeks crowds of official negotiators have labored in vain to free the captives who were kidnapped from the Shanghai-Peking express, on May 6.

Now the mountain paths of the home district of Confucius, China's greatest sage, that for days have been filled with runners carrying terms back and forth between the Paotzuku fortress and the negotiators below, are being put to other uses.

General Has His Way.

Old Tien Chung-Yu, tuchun or military governor of Shantung, having his way, and three brigades of his troops, with machine guns and two scouting airplanes, have plunged into the hill defiles to "dig the bandits out."

Already the soldiers have had two brushes with the outlaws, with fatalities on both sides.

General Tien has thrown his troops in a wide circle about the bandits' hotbed and he is gradually tightening his strangle hold, cutting the outlaws' communications and hoping finally to isolate the gang that is holding the 14 foreigners.

Far above the clouds in the mountain prison, a crisis is believe to be approaching. The outlaws are said to be eager to make terms but they fear the promises of Peking. Also, they know General Tien, who has a reputation for separating the heads of brigands from their bodies.

Freght Rates Draw Protest.

Watertown, S. D.—Minnesota's intrastate freight rates on merchandise, sand and gravel are involved here in two hearings before the interstate commerce commission. The Watertown traffic bureau is seeking adjustment of rates on merchandise to western Minnesota points. Watertown contends that present Minnesota state rates give the twin cities, Sioux City, Sioux Falls, and Mankato an unfair advantage because they are lower than the interstate rates from Watertown to the same terriotory.

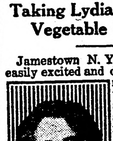
TODAY I AM REAL WELL

So Writes Woman After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Jamestown N. Y.—"I was nervous, easily excited and discouraged and had no ambition. Part of the time I was not able to sit up as I suffered with pains in my back and with weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, both the liquid and tablet forms, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash for inflammation. Today I am real well and run a rooming house and do the work. I recommend your medicine to every woman who complains, and you may use my letter to help any one else. I am passing through the Change of Life now and I keep the Vegetable Compound in the house, ready to take when I feel the need of it."—Mrs. ALICE D. DAVIS, 203 W. Second St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Often some slight derangement may cause a general upset condition of the whole system, indicated by such symptoms as nervousness, backache, lack of ambition and general weakness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine for such troubles. In many cases it has removed the cause of the trouble.



Headaches Are Usually Due to Constipation

Something Coming to Him.

Two little boys were playing one spring day when Johnnie said to Willie: "Let's play that you are a pig and I am a bull, and you get down and wallow in the mud, and I will sit upon the fence and bellow."

Willie thought that would be a good game, so he wallowed about in the mud for a while, then thinking he would like to change, he said: "Now you be the pig and wallow in the mud and I will sit upon the fence and bellow."

"Oh, no," said Johnnie, "you will have time enough to bellow when your mother sees your clothes."—Judge.

GAVE WORLD NEW FLOWERS

English Clergyman by Careful Work Succeeded in "Breeding" Varieties of Peculiar Poppies.

Rev. William Wilkes, for a long time vicar of Shirley in England, died recently. He was a man of godly life and a faithful minister of religion, but the world will remember him as the man who gave it a new and lovely flower. It was in 1880 that Mr. Wilkes found in his vicarage garden a white-edged variant of the common scarlet poppy, says the Youth's Companion. He saved and planted the seed. Only a few plants produced the white-edged flowers, but these he carefully bred. The stock showed remarkable power of variation and after a number of years the clergyman-botanist had produced not only white-edged poppies, but pure white, yellow, pale pink, and many other colors with golden centers instead of the black centers of the original field poppy. Those interesting and lovely flowers now growing in almost every garden in the world are called Shirley poppies, from the place of their origin.

Labor —that's the Big Cost in Painting

LABOR accounts for about three-quarters of the entire cost of a painting job. Materials cost only about one-quarter—so the possible saving in cost between the best and the cheaper materials is not worth consideration.

And by specifying the best paint, and getting years of extra wear, you save the big labor cost of frequent re-painting. You get the most economical job in the end.

PATTON'S Sun-Proof PAINT

—is longer-lasting because it is richer in linseed oil. It will not peel or blister if applied to surfaces fit for painting. It forms a tough film of protection against time and weather.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—The federal council of the Churches of Christ in America issued a call to 125,000 congregations in America to rally to the support of President Harding's proposal that the United States enter the permanent court of international justice.

Washington — President Harding, members of the cabinet and ranking officers of the army, navy and marine corps were invited guests for the annual choral concert by Washington school children. Eight thousand children composed the chorus.

Washington—A thorough investigation has convinced the shipping board, Chairman A. D. Lasker announced, that there is no prospect that the bid of more than $1,000,000,000, made by John W. Slack of Silver Creek, N. Y., for the board's merchant fleet would ever be executed if it were accepted.

Washington — American airplane manufacturers, whose product is believed to be superior to that of most foreign countries, are preparing to take an important place in the world aircraft markets. This was disclosed in the announcement of H. M. Hoepli, chief of the auto division of the Department of Commerce, that the government had undertaken international aircraft survey to determine where manufacturers of this country can successfully compete with foreign producers. The investigation was started at the request of automobile manufacturers.

Domestic

Scranton—Nearly 50 persons were injured, 3 seriously, when the supports of a dance pavilion at Lake Winona gave way.

Martinez, Calif.—More than 1,000 persons were endangered, a horse was killed and a grass fire started when bullets from a firing squad severed electric power wires above a crowd at Memorial day exercises.

Chicago — Government ownership was declared to be the real purpose of the railroad valuation conference held here, in a statement signed by six western railway presidents.

Springfield — Bernard Grant, sentenced to hang in Chicago June 15, was granted a reprieve until Oct. 19 by Governor Len Small. The case is to be taken to the state supreme court.

Chicago—Bishop Thomas Nicholson of Chicago area of the Methodist Episcopal church left for New York en route to England to attend the Irish and English Wesleyan conferences.

Brownsville, Tenn.—The body of Joseph W. Folk, former governor of Missouri, who died in New York reached Brownsville for burial here in the little town where he was born and where he spent the first 25 years of his life.

New York—Bidders for government ships conferred with a special committee appointed by Chairman A. D. Lasker regarding the sale of the shipping board fleet but no decisions were announced.

New York—For the first time in the history of the Knights of Pythias a public initiation was conducted here. The first degree—the rank of page—was conferred on 500 candidates on the steps of Grant's tomb, while a crowd of curious persons looked on.

Ranger, Texas—W. E. McMillan of Los Angeles, who was forcefully removed from a dancing floor here, after he had danced 195 hours and 15 minutes, was reported in a serious condition at a hospital.

New York—Miss Yvonne Mollat, 19 year old aviatrix, sailed on the Rochambeau to attempt a nonstop flight next August from Paris to Constantinople. Miss Mollat, daughter of a New York restauranteur, has been studying flying for two years at Mineola, Long Island.

New York—Al Jolson is finally going into motion pictures. The famous blackface comedian who has turned down numerous alluring offers to go into the movies in the past, has at last heeded the lure of the silent drama. He will make his film debut under the management of D. W. Griffith.

New Orleans—Mrs. Mathilda Levee, who shot and killed her husband, Fred Levee, a lawyer of Los Angeles on a crowded business street here May 9, 1921, and who later was adjudged insane and sent to the asylum for the criminal insane at Jackson, La., was declared sane, the indictment for murder against her was dismissed and she will be set free.

Glens Falls, N. Y.—Ralph Hackmeister, former United States customs officer on the Canadian border and until about a year ago a terror to rum runners in the northern part of the state, is one of five Pittsburgh men held in jail by a United States commissioner on a charge of violating the Volstead act.

Concordia, Kan.—A telephone report from Glasco, 20 miles southeast of here, stated that the crest of the Solomon river flood had reached here and the lowlands, with thousands of acres of wheat and other crops, are being flooded.

Wiscasset, Me.—Captain Donald B. MacMillan, who will sail from here June 16 on the schooner Bowdoin to resume his arctic explorations, announced that one purpose of the expedition it to determine whether there is beginning another ice age, as the advance of glaciers in the last 70 years would indicate.

Sporting

Chicago—It is reported that Judge Kenesaw M. Landis soon will issue an edict prohibiting the use of the major league parks for the staging of boxing contests in the future.

St. Cloud, France—William M. Johnston of California defeated J. Washer of Belgium in the final round for the men's singles hard courts championship of the world. Suzanne Lenglen defeated Miss Kathleen McKane of England for the women's title.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Officials of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway will be called to meet here to discuss the future use of the race course, Carl G. Fisher, founder and part owner, announced. Mr. Fisher's announcement was prompted by reports that the track would be dismantled and a new speedway built in some other city.

Indianapolis—According to official figures given out here by W. D. Edenburn, of the American Automobile association contest board, Jimmy Murphy is leading the field of race drivers for the 1923 championship with a total of 1,070 points. He was awarded 270 points for finishing third in the 500 mile race, While Milton gained 765 by winning. Had Milton driven the entire race he would have been awarded 1,000 points.

Shelby, Mont.—The steady thump of a hundred hammers amid the flying sawdust of as many saws have dissipated in the public mind any doubt as to the ultimate completion of the huge arena being erected to accommodate the many thousands expected to attend the Dempsey-Gibbons world's heavyweight titular bout to be staged July 4. Contractors have been at work on the structure only one week, yet it has taken definite shape and is now claimed that within thirty days it will be ready to be turned over to the promoters, ready to accommodate 40,000 people in a comfortable manner. Eighty thousand dollars is the approximate cost of the arena. More than a million feet of lumber and 20 tons of nails will be used in its construction.

Foreign

Buenos Aires—Advices received here from Mendoza say that four persons were killed and 10 injured when a mortar exploded in the celebration of the May revolution anniversary.

Berlin—A French courtmartial at Werden has sentenced Herr Schoens, landrat of the Essen district, to five years imprisonment and a fine of 10,000,000 marks for writing an insulting letter to General Degoutte.

Cairo, Egypt.—The Egyptian member has promised to submit to parliament a petition handed to him by the American minister, J. Morton Howell, signed by 6,000 Egyptian women, advocating the prohibition of intoxicating liquors.

Paris—The Japanese journalist Sakahe Osurgi, who was arrested on May 1, after a communist meeting, for insulting the police, and sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment, has been ordered expelled from France for being in the possesison of a false passport.

St. Johns, N. F.—The passengers and crew of the Canadian Pacific liner Maryale which sank striking Cape Freel's rock off the southern coast to New Foundland, were picked up here by the liner Melita, of the Canadian Pacific line and continued their voyage to England.

Olongapo, P. I.—Probably the most heterogenous collection of humanity ever embarked for a transport voyage made their way aboard the United States army transport Merritt, which will be their "ark" to carry them to America—their promised land. They are the 565 remaining of the band of 8,000 that fled red Russia last winter with Admiral Stark on the famous "white" fleet.

Madrid—El Ferrol, Spain's chief naval arsenal, is aroused by rumors that the government intends to build a powerful fleet. The launching of a building campaign to restore the Spanish fleet high in rank among the world's navies has been hanging fire for some time, but it is understood that arrangements have been made by El Ferrol to start intensive building in June.

Tokio—The United Chambers of Commerce of Japan, in session here, have sent representations to the government urging a commercial agreement with Russia and also the subsidizing of an improved type of vessel for the Pacific trade.

Potsdam—Dr. Hans Ludendorff, brother of the noted general, will head an expedition of German scientists to Mexico this year to observe the total eclipse of the sun on Sept. 10. Dr. Ludendorff is director of the astro-physical observatory at Potsdam. All expenses will be borne by the Mexican government.

Geneva—The Swiss government's reply to the soviet note of protest concerning the assassination at Lausanne of Vorowsky, soviet envoy, declares that Switzerland has a better right to demand explanations of the violence suffered by thousands of Swiss in Russia under the soviet regime than to give them regarding the death of one Russian who was an unofficial and unwelcome visitor.

Buenos Aires—The Argentine government proposes to strengthen its fleet by the addition of 12 scout cruisers and a small torpedo boat flotilla. The vessels will replace craft that were under construction in European shipyards for this country at the outbreak of the World war.

Paris—Eight communists, imprisoned for agitating in the Ruhr, reached the 10th day of their hunger strike, still not eating. Gabriel Peri, one of the radical leaders, was taken to the hospital in a grave condition after the ninth day of his hunger strike. Peri is 56 years old.

EQUITY PLANT SALE DOUBTFUL

H. A. Emerson Remains Silent With No Money Received to Pay Obligations.

MONEY IS PAST DUE

Audit Company Given Certificate—Is Subject to Previous Claim by Altenbernd—June 20 Last Day for Redemption.

Fargo, N. D.—With the deficiency judgment of some $30,000 in favor of Louis Altenbernd, the heaviest creditor, due, and with no definite word from H. A. Emerson of New York in the way of money to meet the company's obligations, the sale of the Equity Co-operative Packing company's plant to the Fargo Packing company appears to be off.

An effort apparently is being made to prolong the period of negotiating until June 20, when the year of redemption upon a sheriff's certificate of sale of certain property to Louis Altenbernd expires. When he was asked about his deficiency judgment, Mr. Altenbernd said he thought it was due now, "but that they tell me it isn't due until June 20."

The sale to the Fargo Packing company, an organization engineered by Mr. Emerson, was approved at a special meeting of Equity Packing plant stockholders on March 22 in Fargo. Previous to the meeting, it had been approved by a postcard vote conducted by C. W. Reichert, president and general manager of the company.

Under the terms of the sale, Mr. Emerson was to advance over $150,000 to meet outstanding obligations of the company and to give Equity stockholders $750,000 of stock in the new company. The money to pay the obligations was to be forthcoming by June 6.

No Money From Emerson.

No money has been received from Mr. Emerson to meet some $3,800 in personal taxes for 1920 and 1921 which were to be paid by June 1 if penalty and interest were to be avoided.

No money has been received from him to meet a judgment, interests and costs amounting to $14,681.76 for the Northwest Audit company, and on May 31 the company received a sheriff's certificate of sale for that amount.

This represents a lien subject to a specific lien made by Louis Altenbernd of Sabin, Minn., to satisfy his deficiency judgment. On June 20 Mr. Altenbernd received a sheriff's certificate of sale totaling about $24,000 for certain Equity Co-operative Packing company property, including the houses in West Fargo. The year of redemption is up on June 20, and so far there has been no effort to redeem it.

STATE ASKS BANKERS' TRIAL

Supreme Court Is Asked to Review McKenna Ruling.

Bismarck, N. D.—The State of North Dakota asked the supreme court to issue a writ calling upon the district court of Ransom county to proceed immediately with the trial of men indicted by a Cass county jury in connection with the failure of the Scandinavian-American bank.

George A. Bangs, special assistant attorney general, asked the court to review the decision of Judge George M. McKenna of Napoleon setting aside the indictments, and to reinstate the indictments so the prosecution could proceed without the necessity of another grand jury investigation or the filing of information.

The state's petition for a review of the trial court's findings, presented a short time ago, came up for argument, and Attorney General George Shafer, Mr. Bangs, and H. F. Horner of Fargo, Cass county state's attorney, represented the commonwealth. Judge W. S. Lauder and Attorney Charles E. Wolfe represented the indicted men. Judge McKenna was technically the respondent, but it was the interests of the indicted men which were involved, and consequently their attorneys appeared to resist the petition.

A. C. Townley, William Lemke, John Hastings, F. W. Cathro, and others interested in the bank or in Nonpartisan league affairs, were named in the indictments charging embezzlement, making of false reports, and entries.

PARLDY AGAIN DEADLOCKED

Lausanne.—The Near East conference is again in troubled waters, with each side waiting for the other to give way on unsettled problems, and no immediate solution of the crisis is in sight. The conference is virtually at a standstill, each delegation waiting for instructions from its home government which might enable the plenipotentiaries to break the deadlock.

Rail Shopmen Ask Wage Boost.

Chicago.—Negotiations have been started by the federated shopcrafts, representing an estimated 54,000 employes of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Chicago & Northwestern, and the Southern Railway system, for an increase in wages and return of time and one-half pay for overtime and Sunday work. John Scott, secretary of the railway employes' department of the American Federation of Labor, announced union bodies are seeking wages paid before last year's strike.

COMPETITORS MUST COMPETE

Supreme Court Rules Information in Price Fixing Violation of Anti Trust Act.

PAINT CASES NOW UP

Exchanging Data to Evade Sherman Act Is Prohibited—Justice Reynolds of High Court Hands Down Decision.

Washington.—Exchange of information between business competitors engaged in interstate commerce, the supreme court held, is unlawful when "the manifest purpose" of the companies is to defeat the Sherman antitrust act "without subjecting themselves to its penalties." The opinion was rendered in a case brought by the federal government against the American Linseed Oil company and others.

Contract Unlawful.

The court declined, however, to say to what extent competitors, through a central bureau or any other agency, might go in exchanging trade information without violating the Sherman law.

Explaining that the American Linseed Oil company and other linseed oil manufacturers had by contract arranged to furnish the Armstrong Bureau of Related Industries detailed information concerning their affairs, the information to be confidentially circulated among all subscribers, Justice McReynolds, in delivering the opinion of the court, stated:

Concerted Action Barred.

"In the absence of a purpose to monopolize or the compulsion that results from contract or agreement, the individual certainly may exercise great freedom, but concerted action through combination presents a wholly different problem and is forbidden when the necessary tendency is to destroy the kind of competition to which the public has long looked for protection."

GOVT. WILL OPERATE FLEET

Shipping Board Decides to Operate Vessels Itself.

Washington—The shipping board decided to proceed with direct government operation of sufficient vessels to keep the American flag on all world trade routes. A committee, composed of Chairman Lasker and Commissioner O'Connor and Thompson, was named to map out administrative plans.

Under a resolution adopted by the board the committee will "prepare a plan to be submitted to the shipping board with a view to the formation of such companies or organizations to be owned and controlled by the shipping board, as it may ascertain to be necessary for the purpose of operating sufficient vessels to fully cover world trade routes under the American flag consonant with the greatest possible economy and efficiency in direct government operation."

Decision to name the committee was reached after Commissioner Lissner, who had been in New York conferring with some of those who submitted bids for routes not now operated by the government, reported that only "three or four promising bids remain."

DISMISS MATERNITY SUIT

Washington—Tre supreme court refused to pass on the constitutionality of the Sheppard-Towner maternity act in cases brought by the State of Massachusetts and a Boston taxpayer. Both suits were dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Unanimously the court held that an attack on the validity of the statute by a state did not present a judicial question. As to the suit instituted by Mrs. Harriet A. Frothingham, the court declared her status as a taxpayer did not entitle her to challenge the law.

Discussing questions of jurisdiction raised by the Massachusetts case, the court's opinion, delivered by Justice Sutherland, declared that "looking through forms of words to the substance of their complaint, is merely that officials of the executive department of the government are executing and will execute an act of congress asserted to be unconstitutional; and this we are asked to prevent."

In reference to the suit of Mrs. Frothingham which was instituted in the District of Columbia court, Justice Sutherland said that the right of a taxpayer to enjoin the execution of a federal appropriation act on the ground that it is invalid and will result in taxation for illegal purposes, has never been passed upon by this court.

Bandits Sign Up as Soldiers.

Peking.—Enrollment of the Shantung bandits into the national army is proceeding at Tsao Chwang, according to advices received at the American legation. But those of the bandits who do not desire to become soldiers are slipping away, leaving their rifles behind. Members of the legation feel that it will be only a matter of days until the eight foreigners still held on Paotzuku mountain are released. Barring unforeseen complications, the negotiations are expected to result successfully within a short time.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Hibbing — The Power-for-senator campaign was organized when a mass meeting elected officers for the booster club.

Owatonna—The opening of the June term of the Steele county district court will face a heavy calendar of civil cases, 137 suits being slated.

Owatonna—A class of 75 members, the largest in Owatonna high school history, received diplomas at the 47th annual commencement exercises here.

Fort Ripley — The Parker-Kellogg sawmill was totally destroyed by fire originating, it is believed, from sparks falling on the roof on the building from the chimney.

Brainerd—A committee of the Brainerd lodge of Elks has had gold medals made for presentation to the valedictorians in the five high schools in the jurisdiction of the lodge.

Owatonna—Southeastern Minnesota photographers will gather to reorganize the Southeastern Minnesota Photographers association. Leading commercial photographers of this section of the state attended.

Thief River Falls—Arthur E. Nelson, mayor of St. Paul, has accepted an invitation to make an address here on July 4, at which time the local post of the American Legion is planning to hold a celebration.

Rochester—A countrywide meeting of breeders, bankers, newspaper and business men is to be conducted here June 11 to arrange for a "better sire" campaign. A permanent organization of the county association has already been perfected.

Ellendale—At least 1,000 farmers and businessmen of Steele and Freeborn counties are expected to attend the first annual picnic of district No. 5, Minnesota Co-operative Creameries association, which is to be conducted at Beaver Lake, near here.

St. Paul—Money deposited by the state treasurer in the 1,050 banks throughout the state has earned $87,875 in the six months previous to March 31, reports from Henry Rines, state treasurer, showed. The interest money is turned into the state general fund, Mr. Rines said.

Albert Lea—A "charity frolic" is to be staged by the Elks lodge, June 11 to 16. A spectacle called Chinatown has been obtained by the entertainment committee, which promises the greatest amusement event ever put on here.

Springfield—The 21st annual convention of the Brown County Sunday School association will be conducted at Springfield June 11. Special music will be furnished by the Comfrey choir and the Evangelical choir of Sleepy Eye. Dr. C. G. Hohn of New Ulm, Professor E. N. Johnson of Sleepy Eye and state leaders will speak.

Austin—The purebred sire campaign begun in March in Mower county and which had to be discontinued on account of bad roads, will be continued. About 40 purebred sires were placed in the two weeks of active selling and the campaign managers expect to place about 60 more good sires between June 4 and 14.

Austin — Curves in the highways covering large areas rather than the short saucer is the method adopted by the Mower ctunty commissioners to cut automobile accidents to a minimum and with the completion of another such curve this year there will be 29 in the county.

Rochester—Henry Schuster, on his 61st birthday, drove the first stake in the first oil drilling operations in southern Minnesota, among the apple trees on the Biglow farm, two miles east of Rochester. Tom Jones, engineer for the Rochester Oil and Development company, in charge of the operations, remarked as he held the stake for Mr. Schuster, "It was just a year ago today that I brought in a gas well in the Kansas fields."

Red Wing—A telephone rate hearing was conducted in the chamber of commerce before James Howett of the state railroad and warehouse commission. The Tri-State Telephone and Telegraph company, which recently purchased the Red Wing Telephone company, obtained an increase from the commission a month ago on business and single party residents' telephones. The commission, however, allowed but half of the increase asked on the four party home phones.

Minneapolis—The Minnesota League of Women Voters began its statewide campaign for a mile long petition urging the participation of the United States in the permanent court of international justice, in obtaining for the first signature that of President Lotus D. Coffman of the University of Minnesota. Other signatures obtained were those of Mayor George E. Leach, W. I. Nolan, Einar Hoidale, F. H. Carpenter, Judge E. F. Waite, W. F. Webster, Chief Justice Calvin L. Brown and Archbishop Austin Dowling.

Madison—The Sons of Norway lodges of western Minnesota will have their annual picnic at the fair grounds in this city on Sunday, July 1. The speakers announced for the occasion are Governor Preus, Senator Henrick Shipstead, T. O. Gilbert of Willmar, Minn., national president of the Sons of Norway lodge, and others.

Albert Lea—The tuberculosis sanitorium for Steele, Faribault and Freeborn counties is to become a reality. This was virtually decided upon at a meeting of the three bodies of county commissioners held at the courthouse in Albert Lea.

Duluth—Seven boats arrived at the Duluth-Superior harbor, each bringing about eight thousand tons of coal.

Pelican Lake—The body of a woodsman, Frank Mattson, aged 40, of Orr, Minn., was found floating near a dock in Pelican lake.

Owatonna—The Owatonna high school alumni association named Louis Deninger as its president at its annual meeting and reception to the 1923 graduating class.

Collegeville—John B. McNally, of New Richmond, Wis., won the silver loving cup here at the end of the annual students track and field meet of St. John's college and high school.

Crosby—Joe Dorf was instantly killed and his son was badly injured when their automobile overturned on the Pennington bridge. Dorf was a blacksmith at the Mahnomen mine.

Waseca—The local school board has brought suit against 19 insurance companies to compel the companies to pay the $78,000 due on the building burned last January or to replace the building.

Rochester—While Henry Bennett, 23 year old farmer, was sick in a Rochester hospital with influenza, members of the Six Oaks Pleasant Valley Community club put in 70 acres of crop on his farm near Elgin.

Janesville—An independent club will represent Janesville baseball during the summer. Organization of the club is being completed as far as possible from local talent. Games are being scheduled with independent clubs in this section.

Glenwood—That Glenwood now will have a co-operative creamery is believed to be assured. Organization work has been going on and stock has been sold, but it has been decided to wait until $12,000 worth of stock has been disposed of before starting.

Farmington—John McDermott, night policeman at Rosemont who was shot in the back by a member of a citizens' gun squad at Rosemont, in an attempt to round up an automobile load of bandits, died at the Farmington hospital.

Dodge Center—The local board of education has completed the signing of its staff of instructors for the 1923-24 school year. L. E. Warren will be superintendent of schools and Theodore B. Larson principal of the high school.

Wanamingo—J. S. Jones, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation, will be the principal speaker at the annual picnic of the Goodhue County Farm bureau, June 12. A sport program will provide another feature of the picnic.

Hibbing—Sixty-five alumni of the University of Minnesota from all over the Iron Range greeted University officials at a hotel here at the opening meeting of the $2,000,000 memorial stadium-auditorium drive on the Range.

Duluth—Iron ore shipments from Duluth and Superior ore docks to lower lakes ports are greatly increasing. Most of the iron ore at the various ore docks in Duluth and Superior has been contracted for shipping.

St. Cloud—The Minnesota state encampment, Veterans of Foreign Wars, be in St. Cloud on June 21, 22 and 23, and it is expected that between 800 and 1,000 former service men will be in attendance. The committee in charge of preparations, headed by E. G. Ferh, is outlining plans for exceptinally fine entertainment programs.

Little Falls—Village councils of Royalton and Long Prairie have passed resolutions favoring the rejection of the application for power rights on the part of the Pike Rapids power company and favoring the granting of such power rights in the Mississippi river between thi scity and Royalton to the Little Falls waterpower company.

Dodge Center—Walter De Long, manager of the local ball club last year, has practically completed efforts to put another team into the field this year and the club is expected to take the field against other independent clubs in this section of the state within a week or two. Thirteen have already been signed to play under De Long's management.

Minneapolis—The twentieth annual exhibition of the American Peony society, known generally as the National Peony show, will be held at the Hippodrome, Minnesota State Fair grounds, June 21, 22 and 23, it has been announced by W. F. Christman, Minneapolis, general chairman of the show. In the exhibition, both amateur and professional growers will display their choicest blooms.

St. Cloud—That the Cathedral high school ranks as one of the best in the state was the compliment Father Guenwald brought to the students from the state public examiner of the state university. He said Cathedral high will be recommended for a place in the Northwest Educational association, whereby its diplomas will be recognized in the northwestern states.

Rochester—Lecture sessions, surgical clinics and a dinner at the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. J. Mayo, marked the day's events in the annual four-day session here of the American Medical Surgical association. More than 100 fellows of the association are attending, chiefly coming from eastern medical centers. Many of America's most famous surgeons are attending.

Cambridge—Better livestock on the farms surrounding this city was given another boost when a purebred Holstein bull, six months old and a Duroc-Jersey brood sow were to be given away at the second Bargain day here this season.

St. James—Mrs. T. S. Mondale, wife of the Rev. T. S. Mondale of St. James, died after suffering two and one-half years from sleeping sickness, which paralyzed the lower half of her body. She was the first patient upon whom Doctors Rosenow and Waltman of Rochester stopped the spread of the disease.

THIS LITTLE BABY GIRL

Was Benefited by the Good Her Mother Got from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my little girl was born, and the effect it had was wonderful. This will be the first child I have nursed, as I had to bring my two boys up on the bottle. I was very nervous and worried, tired all the time, and after I read about the Vegetable Compound I tried it and kept on with it. I still continue its use and recommend it to my friends. You may publish these facts as a testimonial for your medicine."—Mrs. Wm. Klinge, 169 Plymouth St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many mothers are left in a weakened and run-down condition after the birth of the child, and for such mothers the care of the baby is well-nigh impossible. Not only is it hard for the mother, but the child itself will indirectly suffer.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother at this time. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It can be taken in safety by the nursing mother.

Curtis Aphorisms.

Cyrus H. K. Curtis has no set rules which have guided his life—no "motto." He has a few aphorisms, which aptly describe him and his methods. "Yesterday ended last night," is one of his favorites, meaning that he never looks back; his mind is always on the present and in the future. "Capitalize your errors," is another. "There is no fun in doing things that are easy," is another, and then he will add: "The real sport is in doing the things that are hard. That is a game worth playing." CHAPTER XIII—Continued.

—20—

Currie interrupted to say, "But, John, if the lights are turned out, how are we to know that you did not write those messages yourself?"

Without a smile on his face Bartley replied: "I did not intend to turn out the light. I am going to do what few mediums ever attempt to do: that is, to see if we can secure a message on these slates in full light. There have been so many frauds in slate-writing seances that a test made in the dark has no value."

As he spoke he tore the wrapping from the package and disclosed a number of ordinary school slates tied together with a string. When he had cut the string and placed the slates on the table before him, he added: "You might claim that these slates already have a message written on them, so I will wash the surface of each with water. If there was any writing on them, it will be wiped out."

With our eyes following every movement, he took a piece of cloth, dipped it into the glass of water, and carefully washed one side of a slate. As he was beginning to wash the other side, he paused and said to Currie, "You may think I have not washed the slate thoroughly enough; suppose, Currie, you take it and wash the other side yourself. Make a good job of it."

Currie's earnestness was almost laughable as he took the slate and turned it over and over, examining both surfaces. When he had finished he whispered to me, "There was not a darned thing on that slate."

The same method was employed with the other slates. First, Bartley would wash one side, then would call upon one of us to examine the slate and wash off the other side. I was left until the last, and I examined my slate very carefully before I touched it with the cloth. On the side which Bartley had washed little drops of water still clung. The unwashed side was dirty but showed no traces of having been written on.

When I had finished my task, Bartley took one of the slates and said: "You have seen there was no writing of any kind on these slates. I am going to give one to each of you. Miss Potter should place hers under her feet; Currie might sit on his; the rest of you can place them under your coats."

He gave us each a slate, and we did as he suggested. I wondered, as I placed mine under my coat, just what Bartley expected to discover. Somehow the whole thing seemed so absurd. He was so serious about it, however, that I began to believe that he must expect to receive a message of some sort. We sat silent and expectant, I, for one, feeling a little foolish.

Bartley, who had glanced at his watch several times, waited for five minutes to pass before he said, "Suppose, Currie, you look at your slate."

Currie grinned, as if to say he considered it all foolishness, but did as requested. As he glanced at his slate, the smile left his face, his jaw dropped, and his eyes grew big with wonder. He looked at it several seconds as if he could not believe his eyes, then slowly passed it to me. I took it eagerly, glanced at it, and in my turn was startled. There, however, in a sprawling hand, running across the slate that had been blank a few moments before, was written, "Currie, people who steal whisky out of a vault at midnight will come to a bad end."

Almost unable to credit my eyes, I stared at the slate. Both sides had been so thoroughly washed that when Currie had taken it they were still wet. How the writing had gotten on the slate, I could not imagine.

Miss Potter gave a sudden cry. She had risen to her feet with shining eyes. Holding her slate in one trembling hand, she tried to speak, failed, then cried triumphantly: "It's a message—a message from Mr. Slyke! I knew it would come," and sank back into her chair, adding, as if unable to believe the evidence of her own senses, "It's in his own handwriting, his very own, and he tells me what to do."

Bartley took the slate from her trembling fingers, a curious expression on his face. He placed it on the table, and we crowded round to examine it. This time the entire surface of the slate was covered with writing, in the same sprawling hand that had written on Currie's and mine. The letters were large and looked as if the person who had written the message had been very weak. Too astonished to speak, we bent and read:

"All will be well with me if you aid those who are trying to discover who injured me. For my peace, do this: listen to the medium—" and the message trailed off in a large S.

"It's Mr. Slyke's writing," Miss Potter cried excitedly. "I recognize it. There was nothing on the slate when I placed my feet on it."

Bartley faced her gravely, with something in his manner that gave me the impression that he was not at all surprised at what was happening.

"Then you are absolutely sure it is in his writing?" he asked.

Not trusting herself to speak, she simply nodded.

At that moment the bell rang, and the butler passed through the room on his way to the door. In the second before his return, I saw Doctor King steal a look at his slate, and, from the startled look on his face, I knew that he, too, had received a message. Meeting my eyes, he gave me a faint, wondering smile and shook his head doubtfully.

The man whom the butler ushered in was the medium that Bartley had secured in New York. He was very tall and thin, dressed in black, with white, unhealthy face, shifty eyes, and hair a bit too long.

After he had been introduced, Bartley told us that we were to begin the seance at once. The first thing to be done was to place the medium in a chair in the corner and tie his hands and feet firmly. Roche was selected to draw the rope through the rungs of the chair, tie his hands behind his back, and place a gag in his mouth so that he could not speak. He performed his task with the thoroughness of a police officer trained in the work; and when he informed us that the medium could neither move nor speak, I believed him.

At Bartley's suggestion we seated ourselves around the table. It was a small one, not very heavy in construction. We placed our hands on its surface as directed, and linked them together by hooking the thumb and little finger of each hand around the finger of the hand next to it. We were told that under no circumstance were we to break this circle.

Bartley spent some time in making sure that we were arranged in the proper manner. I was seated with Currie on my left, my little finger clasped around his thumb, and Bartley himself on my right. He rose and turned off the lights, then groped his way back to my side, and a second later his finger closed around mine.

I confess that I felt a bit like a fool as I waited there in the pitch darkness. What we were doing seemed childish; yet back of it all there was such a general air of expectancy that I was tense with excitement. The great draperies had been drawn over the windows, and not even a ray of light penetrated the room. Just what it was that we were waiting for I did not know. Something might or might not take place, the medium had said. We sat in silence for a number of minutes, minutes that dragged endlessly. I must confess that to me they were not the most pleasant I had ever spent.

Someone drew a deep breath, and I thought the table had started to move. Then a silence followed, so deep that I could not hear even my neighbor breathing. I felt as if I were all alone in the darkness. Only the reassuring touch of the fingers on each side of me drew me back to sanity.

Suddenly, when I was least expecting it, I felt the table under my fingers sway back and forth for a second, then fall back upon the floor with a little bang. Currie breathed hard, as if afraid; and his grasp on my fingers tightened. Then without warning came a series of ten knocks, faintly, as if someone were knocking at a distant door. I could not tell where they came from. They seemed to be in the air, on the floor, everywhere but on the table. One thing was sure: they did not come from the direction in which the medium sat. Besides, he had been tied too tightly in his chair to have been able to make them.

Silence again, then more raps, quick little running raps, never very loud, that would start and stop a second, then trip away like little feet running to and fro.

"Are you there?" Bartley's voice asked, hesitatingly.

Almost before his words had died away, there came a series of loud raps, almost falling over each other.

Then Bartley's voice again, cool but low, "Can you communicate with us?"

I had expected that the raps would reply at once, but instead there was a long silence. Several times Bartley repeated the question, and still no answer.

At length he asked, "Shall we try some other method?"

Raps answered, tumbling over each other in their eagerness, and the table tipped so violently that I expected it would fall over. It returned to an upright position with a bang; then silence again. A deep moan from the direction of the medium startled me, then more moans interspersed with sighs.

A shrill, thin voice, ghostly and far away, said brokenly, "Oh—o-oh—I—f-feel you; I know—you are—there—there—"

A silence, in which I hardly dared to breathe. The table tipped a second time and a deep voice which seemed familiar, though I could not place it, said, "I am here—here, though you do—not see—me. I was murdered by—by—"

What it might have added we never knew. Miss Potter suddenly cried out, not in fear but in joy, "It's Mr. Slyke—his voice—"

Bartley, afraid that she might rise in her excitement and break the circle, whispered to her, and she settled back.

I now recognized the voice as that of Slyke, a little changed, it is true, but enough like it to be easily identified. I was too dazed to think; the raps, the darkness, the voice, and the fear that was creeping into my heart, were almost more than I could bear.

Silence again, broken only by the uneasy moans of the medium. Then, without warning, someone cried in terror, "Look! The stairs, the stairs!"

Almost in front of us was the stairway leading to the tower room. There upon the top step, was a tiny light, unlike any light that I had ever seen. It was hardly larger than a silver dollar, of an unearthly whiteness; then it began to grow larger and larger, until it changed into a luminous arm floating in the air. I heard someone gasp in fear, then all was silence again. The light continued to change. Now there were two arms, then the trunk of a body, and then, out of nothing, an entire human figure appeared, glowing with a soft, pale light in the darkness. A misty figure with ghostly, shining feet and hands, but no head! It began to float down the stairs, a step at a time, seemingly upon the air.

Currie's hand trembled under mine; and I controlled my own fear with an effort, as I pressed it reassuringly.

Half way down the stairs a head appeared above the body. One moment there was nothing there; the next, a face with burning eyes and tangled hair. I knew instinctively whose it was. It belonged to Slyke, the murdered man. A voice that seemed to come from the mouth said, "I have come back to place my hand on the person that killed me."

The figure took a step toward us, the table before us fell over on the floor with a crash, and a voice almost at my elbow cried in terror, "For God's sake, turn on that light. Don't let that d—d thing touch me."

As suddenly as it had appeared, the figure vanished, and we were left in the darkness.

CHAPTER XIV

The Murderer Speaks.

Who turned on the lights I do not know. As soon as they flashed on, we looked at each other inquiringly, our eyes filled with fear. Who had cried out in terror and broken the circle?

Bartley motioned to us to sit down again, and took his stand back of the table. He seemed to me to be very weary, and his eyes rested on us sadly, as if he were reluctant to proceed further. It was not until we moved restlessly under his intent gaze that he said, "I am not going to make any comment on what we have just seen." He paused for a second, then added impressively, "But I think I ought to tell you that I know who killed both Slyke and Briffeur."

There was a murmur of astonishment. Currie looked at me appealingly, but I knew no more than he. Roche whispered to Black, and they exchanged looks of bewilderment.

Bartley still hesitated, as if he were very reluctant to continue.

"I know that some of you doubt if we can prove that Mr. Slyke was murdered. You say there are no clues, and I admit that I have never seen a case in which there were so few. There is no doubt, however, that he was murdered, though it is difficult to say what the motive was. In the case of Briffeur, it was very simple."

"Simple!" Roche gasped.

"Yes, simple. There was but one reason and one way, and even one person, that could have killed him."

This statement was too much for Roche; he shook his heard in disbelief.

"Let's consider Mr. Slyke's death for a moment," Bartley continued. "After the party was over, Slyke asked Mr. Lawrence to stay behind and offered to sell him some whisky. They had a drink, then Lawrence went home. But we found three glasses, showing that someone besides Lawrence had drunk with Slyke. Let us say this third person killed Slyke. Understand me: I do not believe that, when he came, he had any intention of killing him—that came later. We will assume that Slyke and this third person went upon the balcony, for what reason I cannot say, but I am sure that Slyke was the one that suggested going there. No murderer would have selected it, voluntarily, as a place in which to kill his victim."

He paused for a second, then continued: "After Slyke had been killed, the thought occurred to the murderer that it was possible to make his death look like suicide. He undressed the body in the room above the bedroom, and later carried his clothing downstairs, placing it on a chair beside the bed. But he overlooked a stocking that had fallen on the floor behind the door of the room above. Criminals, no matter how shrewd, always make some mistake that betrays them; this person drew the bedclothes up around Slyke's neck. If he had not done that, I doubt if we would ever have suspected that Slyke was murdered. The shot took effect at once. It would have been impossible for him to have drawn the bedclothes up around his own neck, and placed his hands by his side before he died."

The doctor's voice sounded perplexed as he said, "But, Mr. Bartley, this is all a rather fine-spun theory."

"I expected that someone would say that," Bartley smiled. "It is more than an unsupported theory. However, let us proceed. The murderer went down to the living room and brought back with him two cards, which he threw on the floor of the room where the glasses were. If its being suicide was questioned, then the finding of the cards would throw suspicion on the members of the card party."

MRS. A. RYCKMAN GAINS 35 POUNDS

Declares Tanlac Restored Her Fully When Flu Had Almost Wrecked Her Health.

"I feel duty-bound to tell others about Tanlac, for it built me up thirty-five pounds and gave me splendid health just when I was on the verge of a breakdown," was the statement of Mrs. Ada Ryckman, 1949 Conway St., St. Paul, Minn.

"I nearly died from the flu followed by an attack of pneumonia and was terribly run down after the crisis. My stomach was so badly upset even a light meal caused me pain and distress from gas and awful spells of heartburn. I had sudden attacks of dizziness, pains in my head, couldn't get a good night's sleep and was so nervous and weak I was unable to do my housework.

"But those dark days when I thought I would never be well again are gone now and health, strength and happiness have taken their place. Tanlac is my household treasure and I'll never forget to say a good word for it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Tanlac vegetable pills are nature's own remedy for constipation. Sold everywhere.—Advertisement.

THE HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Successor to "The Northern Light"

VOL. XIII. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY JUNE 15, 1923 NO. 6

Miss Betty Johnson went to Bemidji Tuesday to attend summer school.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Olaf Eide early Thursday morning.

Mrs. Ralph Johnson is slowly recovering from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. J. Arness and son Benny of Fork visited over Sunday at the C. H. Gunheim home.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Heinze returned home Monday from a visit to Grand Forks and Niagara, N. D.

Peter Hanson went to Haug Monday night and brot his wife's mother Mrs. Hagen, back with him for a visit.

Miss Gladys Hagen of Grand Forks came Wednesday to visit at the home of her aunt, Mrs. K. O. Burtness and husband.

The Zion Ladies Aid will meet with Mrs. Ole B. Johnson Sunday June 24th, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. All invited.

Mrs. Fridjof Risberg and children of Boy River, Minn., came Saturday to visit at the home of his mother, Mrs. E. O. Risberg and family.

Mrs. T. Sollom and son, Elmer, and daughters, Gunhild and Olava, went to Grand Forks Saturday and visited with relatives until the next day.

Rev. Kriedt will not preach in Holt next Sunday, as previously announced, but will preach in Thief River Falls at the annual Mission Festival of that church. German services at 11, and English services at 2:30.

Now before haying starts in you will need some repairs, or maybe a new Mower or a new Rake. The Holt Farmers Elevator Co., is expecting a carload of Twine, Binders, Mowers, Rakes, and a full line of repairs. Give us a call.

The executive officers of the depositors association met Sunday with John Bratrud and W. H. Anderson to list the notes and securities of the old bank They met the next day with the depositors and reported their findings to them.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Peterson and daughter Cleo, and Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Saastad autoed to Warren Saturday to attend the school officers meeting and graduating exercises. They also visited relatives and friends in Alvarado and returned home on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson and baby, H. Peterson and Clarence Erickson went to Warren Sunday and brot Mrs. Peterson and their little girl home, but Mrs. Erickson will stay there a few days longer. While there, Mrs. Peterson had the girl's tonsils and adnoids removed and she is getting along as well as could be expected.

Mrs. Julius Faiman went to Thief River Saturday to visit her husband who has been very sick at the hospital in that city. His physician said Mr. Faiman's sickness was caused by his teeth and had them all pulled out. He is now better and it is thot he will be able to come home about Sunday.

At one time Monday forenoon, between the hours of nine and ten, there were ten teams and autos waiting to unload their cream at the Holt creamery. One of the ten was an auto truck with several cans of cream.

The creamery is the life of the country, and the dairy cow never goes on a strike if she has plenty to eat. This country needs more good dairy cows and laying hens, but no more boarders.

Farmers take Notice

A Farmers Tour to Crookston to visit the Northwest Exp'ent Station is being planned by Robert J. Lund of the Marshall County State Bank on Thusday June 21st. The plan is to leave Holt about 8:00 o'clock in the morning and returning in time for doing the evening chores.

Many of the farmers have stated they would sacrifice one days work on the farm in order to get an actual view of experiments such as are made at the Crookston station.

If you have'nt a car, or a friend to ride with, call at the bank and the necessary arrangements will be made.

This is a mighty good chance to get some first hand information on crops, tame hay and system of seeding. It is hoped that there will be at least 20 cars in the line-up early Thursday morning. Let's take a day off and go on this trip- it is well worth your while. Bring lunch and have picnic dinner on the grounds at the station.

In case of rain the tour will be postponed, and you are asked to call the bank for information.

The Nazareth Young People's Society will meet at the home of Mrs. Fred Larson at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon June 17th. Mesdames Fred Larson, Ole Lunke, Gust Peterson will serve. Everybody invited.

M. B. Ordahl, Pastor.

Take Notice

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Holt Farmers Elevator Company will be held on the 26th day of June 1923 at 2 o'clock P. M., at the Community Hall in Holt, Minn., for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors and receiving and acting upon the reports of the officers, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the meeting.

M. O. Mattson,
Secretary

Peter Hanson and family visited her folks at Haug Sunday.

The ladies gave Mrs. John Johnson a parcel shower Saturday.

Benny Heinze left Tuesday for Euclid to attend tent meetings.

Miss Allie Norbeck went to Moorhead Tuesday to attend summer school.

Minnesota machinery, all repairs and twine, for sale at the Farmers Elevator.

John Lein of Grafton, N. D. visited at the C. H. Gunheim's Tuesday and Wednesday.

G. L. Netteland left Friday for Hazel where they expect to spend the summer with relatives.

Paris green and lime dusted on cabbage will discourage the worms, so says the University Farm.

Monday is primary election. Out of the nine candidates on the republican ticket, we believe Oscar Hallam to be the best and strongest for U. S. Senator.

For the first time since the Holt creamery was organized, they were obliged to churn four times Saturday, and made 48 tubs of butter. The Holt creamery gives the farmer as good a deal as any creamery in this section of the state.

C. G. Landerholm, blockman for the Minnesota state prison machinery, and his adjuster, visited Olaf Eide at the Farmers elevator Friday. The machinery and twine manufactured at the Stillwater prison pays all the running expenses of that institution, so that it don't come out of the taxpayers. Besides all this the prison products saves the farmers of Minnesota and some of the adjoining states millions of dollars every year in reduced prices, from those charged by the big trusts, for twine and machinery.

I could not lift anything heavy, and a little extra work some days would put me in bed. A friend had told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I gained in every way, could eat better and felt stronger. I had found nothing before this that did me so much good."—Mrs. J. GRACE, 291 Woltz Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Czar's Treasure.

Among former treasures of the czar's which the revolution has scattered was a magnificent silver toilet service sold at Christie's auction rooms, London, for $18,500. It had 29 pieces weighing 700 ounces and was formerly owned by Czar Alexander I, who ascended the throne in 1801, and is engraved with a crown and the letter M, probably his mother's initial, Mary of Wurtemberg. It comprises mirror, rose water ewer and dish, candlesticks, bowls, bottle, caskets, boxes, snuffers, brushes, whisks, scent-bottles. It is of exquisite workmanship. A Regent street firm purchased it.

Breckenridge—Caught beneath a speeder when it jumped the track, J. J. Brockway of St. Cloud, employee of the Great Northern railway here, had both his legs broken, but when fellow workers rushed to his aid he clamly asked for a cigarette.

Mankato—Attorney Frank E. Morse, a former service man of this city, has been appointed county attorney by the Blue Earth county commissioners. He will succeed Charles E. Phillips, who has been appointed an assistant to the Minnesota attorney general.

Mankato—John Nelson, aged 59, laborer foreman of the J. B. Nelson Construction company of this city for the last 10 years, was killed by coming in contact with a live wire on the construction work at the Mankato state teachers college.

Duluth—Walter Hoover, world's amateur single's sculling champion, left for New York, enroute to London, where he will defend the Diamond Sculls trophy in the English Henley regetta early in June.

Faribault—A. M. Bion was elected president of the Chamber of Commerce for the ensuing year to succeed H. L. Buck, who declined re-election. Other officers elected are Dr. W. N. Theissen and L. F. Shandorf, vicepresident, and A. E. Mollison, treasurer.

Fairmont—Walter Wetenkamp of Welcome, Minn., was awarded the contract for graveling Martin county highways totaling more than 25 miles for $28,949.21. Mr. Wetenkamp's bid was the lowest of nine received by the county board.

Willmar—The Willmar Sash and Door factory was damaged to the amount of several thousand dollars in a fire which is believed to have started from defective wiring. The damage was mostly confined to the building and machinery.

St. Cloud—North Dakota delegates to the United Commercial Travelers convention decided to remain in the fold instead of trying to organize a district of their own. Minnesota and North Dakota at present comprise the district. Albert Lea will probably get the 1924 meeting of the organization, other bidders being St. Paul and Fargo.

Minneapolis—The twentieth annual exhibition of the American Peony society, known generally as the National Peony show, will be held at the Hippodrome, Minnesota State Fair grounds, June 21, 22 and 23, it has been announced by W. F. Christman, Minneapolis, general chairman of the show. In the exhibition, both amateur and professional growers will display their choicest blooms.

Redwood Falls—Sanborn has been selected as the site of the annual picnic of the Masonic Picnic association this year, which will be conducted June 24. The district covered by the association comprises the counties of Brown, Redwood, Renville, Lincoln, Lyons, Cottonwood and Yellow Medicine. Several hundred Masons and their families will attend

Benson—Members of the Nordfjord-Laget assembled here for the annual convention of the organization.

Austin—Reports of damage done by the storm show that at least 36 head of livestock were lost.

St. Cloud—The College Women's club of St. Cloud has voted to award the gift scholarship of $150 this year to Miss Roma Gans, a teacher in the Technical high school. The gift scholarship is awarded annually.

Hastings—A verdict of $1,000 was awarded to Mrs. Susan Zeisea of this city in district court against Samuel Licklich, whom she charged with injuring her son, Fred Sulweir, when the latter was run over by the defendant's automobile.

St. James—Henry Ford received the first vote cast in the straw ballot taken by a St. James newspaper for the next United States president. President Harding took the lead in the total vote.

Hibbing—Judge H. A. Dancer of Duluth, will sit at this term of St. Louis county district court with Judge Martin Hughes in place of Judge Edward Freeman, who is in Carleton on business.

Cambridge—Better livestock on the farms surrounding this city was given another boost when a purebred Holstein bull, six months old and a Duroc-Jersey brood sow were to be given away at the second Bargain day here this season.

Crosby—After watching a wolf's den closely for several weeks, Bob Woods of the Little Pine territory north of here, caught the mother wolf away and captured five cubs. Several cubs have been sold as pets at $6 each.

Ironton—Several hundred acres of timberland between here and Barrows were burned recently but the fires have about played themselves out. A 10-mile stretch of meadow and cutover lands along the Little Pine north of here also has been burning but is now under control.

Hastings—Mrs. Louise Leedstrum, formerly housekeeper for John Herman, now dead, won her suit for damages against his estate in Dakota county district court here. She asked $12,200 as damages for a broken hip received, she alleged, in working for Herman. It was alleged he had thrown water outdoors in winter time and the woman slipped on the ice. The jury granted her $5,300.

Rochester—After years of effort to obtain justice at the hands of the government, the Rochester post of the American Legion has received word that the case of Fred Armstrong, disabled veteran of the World war, has been satisfactorily adjusted. Armstrong will receive compensation to the extent of $80 a month and all back compensation will be paid.

St. Peter—Thirty-nine seniors of Gustavus Adolphus college received degrees of teacher of arts at the 61st annual commencement exercises here. In addition to the degrees given the graduation class, Mathias M. Volstrom, former president of Gustavus Adolphus, received the degree of doctor of divinity, as did Dr. J. P. Uhler, dean of men, who has been a member of the college faculty for 40 years. More than 1,000 visitors were assembled when the senior class marched into the auditorium and took their seats.

St. Cloud—Miss Ruth Mitchell of St. Cloud has invited the sixth district women voters to spend a day at her "Grandmother's Gardens" June 26. There will be representatives from the leagues at Brainerd, Bemidji, Stapleton, Wadena, Elk River and other towns in the district. Miss Mitchell is the president of the Sixth District League of Women Voters.

Fairmont—Years of effort on the part of the city of Fairmont to eliminate death crosisngs and procure better highway connections to the west met with temporary and possibly permanent defeat when the board of county commissioners defeated the proposal to issue $85,000 of highway bonds to construct the first 11 miles of the "Middle Road" to Sherburn.

Thief River Falls—Starting two years ago with only about a dozen head of Guernseys, bid in by breeders of the Red River valley the Guernsey annual sales have doubled and last year more than 25 head were disposed of at auction. This week saw breeders from various parts of Minnesota and North Dakota to the number of nerly 500 vie with one another in obtaining purebred and grade cattle at the livestock pavilion where 56 head were sold for nearly $6,000.

St. Paul—Eleven families, with their stock, machinery and household goods, pasesd through the Twin Cities to new locations in Minnesota during a two week period, according to a statement issued by Oscar H. Smith, State Commissioner of Immigration. The record of the Immigration Department show these settlers were well equipped to begin establishing homes. In addition to household gods and machinery, they brought with them 28 horses, 16 cows, 20 crates of chickens, some hogs and sheep. The families came from Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota.

PRAYING BY PROXY.

From October to February, there is a long line of dirty travelers making their way to the top of the sacred mountain of eastern Tibet. Each one prays as he travels, the prayer consisting of whirling a small cylinder of metal mounted upon a stick. At intervals there are larger cylinders which they whirl as they pass. The mountain is 12,000 feet high and the climb is hard, but the descent is said to be just as difficult.

Soften Hard Water.

Where the ordinary water is hard, get a barrel and fill it half full of wood ashes. Then add water to the brim. This makes lye, and a gallon of this in a large kettle of hard water will make it as soft as rain water.

Coal Found in America in 1669.

Father Hennepin discovered coal in 1669 near the present site of Ottawa, Ill., and this appears to be the first record of the finding of coal in America, but it was not mined until nearly a century and a half later.

E. Tustin Montague Pours Out Gratitude to Tanlac for Restoration of Health.

Summing up his enthusiastic statement of the benefits he has received from Tanlac, E. Tustin Montague, a printer, of 20 S. 10th St., Minneapolis, Minn., made these characteristic remarks: "Tanlac has well merited printed praise, and I'd be glad for my testimonial to be published broadcast.

"I lost my appetite, my stomach went bad, and I began to suffer a great deal with indigestion. I thought my trouble would go away, but it got worse instead, and I was sometimes so weak, nervous and worn out I felt like I would never get through the day, and a rush in the shop just left me completely done up.

"But since taking Tanlac I have gained ten pounds, can eat anything, and rush jobs are a picnic for me. I used to fear I was near a breakdown, but that fear is gone now, for I am simply feeling fine. I am Tanlac's friend for life."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Health Advice.

An East side young matron, whose mother lives in Maryland, recently paid her ancestral home a visit. While there she fell ill. When convalescing she took a walk and met an old negro caretaker. "What was the matter with you, Missy?" he asked. "I had ptomaine poisoning," she replied. He looked at her sympathetically for a moment or two and then his eyes strayed to her shoes. "Ise always maintained," he said at last, "that you should wear rubbers when going out in wet weather."—Detroit News.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

Arithmetical Complaints.

Two men were discussing the ups and downs of fortune in the Finance building recently. Said one: "My life can be likened to an arithmetic problem."

"How is that?"

"Well, when my father's estate was settled years ago there were seven of us. I suffered from long division."

"Yes?"

"And last week my fourth child was born. Now I'm suffering from multiplication."

KANSAS COURT LAW IS INVALID

Supreme Court Hands Down Decision in Suit to Test Industrial Court.

TAFT GIVES DECISION

Says Employer and Employe Are Deprived of Right to Contract—Individual's Right Is Upheld.

Washington.—The Kansas law creating a state industrial relations court was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court so far as it attempted to fix wages in packing houses. Chief Justice Taft, delivering the decision in a case brought by the Charles Wolff Packing company of Topeka, said the law in respect was in conflict with the fourteenth amendment, and deprived the company of its property and liberty of contract without due process of law.

"It has never been supposed since the adoption of the Constitution," he declared, "that the business of the butcher, or the baker, the tailor, the wood chopper, the mining operator, or the miner was clothed with such a public interest that the price of his product or his wages could be fixed by state regulation. Since the adoption of our Constitution, one does not devote one's property or business to the public use, or clothe it with a public interest merely because one makes commodities for, and sells to, the public in the common callings of which those above mentioned are instances.

"An ordinary producer, manufacturer or shopkeeper may sell or not sell, as he likes, and while this feature does not necessarily exclude businesses from the class clothed with a public interest, it usually distinguishes private from quasi-public occupations."

The industrial act was aimed to compel arbitration through a state board, whose decision was to be final, in all essential industries, and thus insure continuity of production. Pointing out that the law permitted the employer who was dissatisfied with the decision of the court to go out of business, and the dissatisfied workman to quit, provided he did not agree with his fellows to do so or combine with others to induce them to quit, Chief Justice Taft said the essence of the statute curtailed the right of the employer on the one hand and of the employe on the other, to contract about their affairs.

GRAIN ACREAGE IS REDUCED

Big Reduction Forecast in North Dakota Wheat Yield.

Fargo, N. D.—North Dakota's wheat acreage has been reduced 9 per cent this year, and the June 1 total estimated wheat production for the state is placed at 82,107,000 bushels, compared with 123,234,000 in 1922, according to the government crop estimate as made public by J. G. Diamond, statistician for the United States bureau of agricultural economics.

There is a reduction of 643,000 acres of durum and 144,000 acres in other varieties, according to this estimate. The total durum area is placed at 3,054,000 acres and other varieties at 4,899,000 acres, a total of 7,953,000 acres compared to 8,740,000 acres in 1922.

"The spring wheat crop on June 1, generally lacked top growth, but was in shape to advance favorably," says the report.

Valley Reduction Greatest.

"Geographically the decrease in wheat acreage was heaviest in the district embracing the lower half of the Red River valley, and adjacent territory west to the 101st meridian. The north central section and the district comprising roughly the southwest section of the state, show on the whole an increase."

The estimated yield per acre for spring wheat is 10.3 bushels, which brings the total of 82,107,000, the estimated production for 1922 which, while 42,127,000 less than last year's bumper crop, compares favorably with the 1917-1921 average final out-turn of 77,088,000 bushels.

"While the final yield may be larger or smaller according as conditions developing during the remainder of the season prove more or less favorable to the crop than the average," says the report, "in the past 10 years, beginning in 1913, final yields were seven times below and three times above the June forecast."

Oats acreage increased 5 per cent to 2,507,000 acres, and barley shows a 35 per cent increase to 1,361,000 acres, according to the report.

Minnesota Fires Rekindled.

Duluth, Minn.—Brush and timber fires are again causing trouble in northeastern Minnesota, it was reported at the office of John H. Nelson, district supervisor for the state forest service. The dry weather of the last week has caused several of the old fires to flare up, said Mr. Nelson. A truckload of men was sent to Tower in response to a call from Ranger Murphy who asked for additional guards. None of the fires has reached menacing proportions.

INCIDENT HARD TO EXPLAIN

To Say the Least, Student's Emergence Just at That Moment Was Particularly Unfortunate.

While at college, a classmate came to my room every evening "to do our algebra together," as she expressed it; but, unfortunately, I was obliged to do all the work. I finally became tired of being imposed upon, so the next evening, about the time for her to appear, I crawled under the bed and asked my roommate to tell her I was spending the evening out.

Anne came, but did not linger long, after being informed I would not return until late. She came back into the room again to get a pencil which she had forgotten, just as I was appearing from underneath the bed.

It was useless to try to make an explanation. I was never asked to assist her again.—Exchange.

Primed by Mamma.

The night cashier had his little six-year-old niece over to breakfast with him. They had grapefruit, smothered steak, which he had to cut—for her; French fried potatoes, etc., and got so full they couldn't eat another bite. Chef Goggins did his best for them, and said he never saw a little girl eat more. Then they visited a store where he bought her a pair of new shoes. As they were coming out of the store she said, "Uncle, I want to whisper to you." He bent down and heard: "Mamma told me to get a haircut out of you if I could."—"Bix," in Lincoln Journal.

Not True.

Little Mary O'Malley was a great chum of her dad, and always considered it part of her job to defend him. Her uncle, who was visiting the O'Malleys, delighted to tease little Mary.

"Your father's positively the most homely man I ever saw!" announced Uncle Dan one day to Mary.

"He is not!" defended the little girl. "He's never home," she added, much to the satisfaction of Mrs. O'Malley.—Judge.

What would you do in his place?

The steeplejack lights his pipe and goes on painting

Imagine, if you can, a steeplejack 487 feet above the street level. Hanging on by his teeth he is applying a more or less rough-and-ready coat of paint to a flagpole.

It may seem foolish that a flagpole 487 feet in the air should need a coat of paint; but anyway, that's the case.

Right in the midst of a busy morning's painting an adventurous bee buzzes into the picture. In fact, there are two bees, both buzzing viciously.

What should the steeplejack do?

There being in the profession no local rules for buzzing bees, your average steeplejack probably would get the all-clear signal from below and slide promptly down to safety.

But not Our Hero.

He takes out his pipe, lights it, and goes on painting.

"It soothes the nerves," he says frankly about pipe smoking.

And, by the way, although there are only twenty-five genuine, no-scaffold steeplejacks in the country, Our Hero is one of them.

We have no way of knowing what kind of tobacco the steeplejack pours into his pipe on these bee-buzzing occasions, but we have a feeling that it is Edgeworth.

For Edgeworth does much to give the smoker a sense of calm and peaceful security.

Of course, we wouldn't care to go on record as claiming that smoking a can of Edgeworth is as good as a two-weeks' rest cure in the mountains; but we would like to register very strongly the opinion that smoking any pipe makes life seem more worth living and that smoking a pipe filled with Edgeworth helps a lot.

At least, smokers from all parts of the country write in to tell how much Edgeworth helps them in the general pursuit of health, happiness and several good pipefuls a day.

If you are interested in finding out more about Edgeworth, the most sensible plan is for you to let Larus & Brother Company send you some free samples so that you can try the tobacco for yourself.

—21—

"He was a pretty cool hand," Black interrupted.

"Yes, he was cool enough. He went downstairs into the room where the dog was—"

"But—" Roche commenced.

Bartley did not let him finish. "Yes, I know. The dog should have barked. The reason he did not was because the man was no stranger to him."

The doctor spoke once more, "But you have not proved any of these things are so; you are just supposing."

"No," came the answer, "I have not, but let us consider some of the points that have been proved. Slyke tried to telephone several times during the evening and failed to get his party each time."

Roche and Black were astonished. This was the first time they had heard anything about the telephone calls.

"When he failed again and again to get the person he wanted," Bartley continued, "he asked central to try and locate him for him. All calls from here go through the Saratoga exchange, and it was very easy to find out whom he wanted. But that is not all. On a magazine found on the table beside the whisky glasses were a number of little circles drawn with a pencil, circles that ran into each other."

"What has that to do with it?" asked Black, voicing his wonder.

"A great deal. Those same circles were on the handle of the knife with which Briffeur was killed. I have also a little piece of paper with similar circles drawn on it, and I know the person who drew them. It has been proved scientifically that if a person is playing with a pencil and begins to make figures unthinkingly on anything, his subconscious mind will trick him into always drawing the same design. I found the circles on the magazine in Slyke's room, on the knife that killed Briffeur, and again on the piece of paper. I know to whom Slyke telephoned, and I know also a person who saw the murderer enter the house to call on Slyke the night he was killed."

We leaned forward breathlessly to catch his words, which came with a cold, cutting edge, as he added crisply. "Now, knowing all this, don't you think the person that drew the circles, that was telephoned to, that was seen going into Slyke's, has something to explain? Don't you think so, Doctor King?"

There was no answer, and Bartley demanded sternly, "Doctor King, you are not going to deny, are you, that you killed those two men?"

The question was so unexpected that I sat stunned. He was the last man I should have suspected. Currie cried, "My G—d, John," and fell silent. The doctor's face had gone a dead white, and he sank limply back in his chair. Without raising his eyes, he stammered, scarcely above a whisper, the words drawn from him against his will, "No-o—no—I killed them both."

The next instant he realized what he had said and half rose from his chair, then fell back, clasping his head in his hands. I could not believe my ears. That Bartley should suspect the doctor of the murders seemed incredible enough; but that the doctor himself should admit that it was true was beyond belief. Roche looked first at the doctor, then at Bartley, his eyes bulging with astonishment. Black alone seemed to realize all that the doctor's admission entailed. Currie was still too dazed to understand, for King had been a good friend of his.

Bartley broke the silence with, "We have proved that the doctor is the guilty party. He himself has admitted it. I have suspected him for some time, but when he gave that cry as Slyke's figure appeared, I knew that I was right."

The doctor was still sitting with his head in his hands, and Bartley glanced down at him pityingly before he continued to the rest of us, "From the first, I suspected that whoever had killed Slyke had some knowledge of medicine. The average layman would not have known how to place the revolver in Slyke's hand in such a way that it would appear to be suicide. The point that puzzled me was that the eyes were almost closed. If the guilty person knew enough to place the revolver in Slyke's hand before it stiffened, he should have known that the eyes ought to be open. Miss Potter explained this discrepancy by saying that she had closed the eyes herself, frightened by their stare. Then I was baffled. True, there were the circles on the magazine, but I did not know who made them and there seemed no way of finding out. Then one day, while I was in the doctor's office, he kept drawing little figures on a pad before him as he talked. When he was called to the 'phone, I took out the piece of paper on which he had been drawing and had carelessly thrown it into a waste-paper basket as he passed. On it were the same figures that I had found on the magazine cover. Even then I was slow to believe he could be the murderer, though science had proved that a person always draws the same design. I found the same symbols on the knife handle. There was but one way he could have been killed."

"My G—d, how?" Roche gasped out.

"The knife blow came from the front. You who sat next to the chauffeur heard nothing. No one could have crept up on him without making some sound. Therefore the knife had to be thrown."

"Thrown?" we gasped.

"Yes. That was the only way it could have reached him. The blow came from directly in front of Briffeur. It could only be thrown. Upon the knife handle were the circles such as I had found elsewhere. Someone had scratched them on it in a moment of idleness. It was a trench knife. Doctor King had been to the front; he was the only one directly in front of Briffeur, and the only one who could have thrown it. We had all agreed that Briffeur was killed because he knew who had murdered Slyke, and that the same man murdered them both. There is another proof, also. The only person, outside of the family, that the dog liked was Doctor King. The day we found Slyke dead the dog came in, growled at the rest of us but let King pat him."

The doctor raised his head, his face white save for two red spots in either cheek. His eyes were pools of blazing light. He looked at us wildly for a second, then threw out his hands and in a voice, low at first but growing louder as he continued, he admitted, "Yes, I killed them. I never intended to do so, God knows! It all goes back some time—"

Bartley interrupted him. "To the time when you got mixed up with Slyke and Briffeur, selling whisky?"

"Yes—yes, that was it. It goes back to that." His voice faltered, then he recovered. "I came back from the war, broke. Slyke suggested that I go in with him on running whisky. I had a camp and fast motorboat on Lake Champlain; it was all I did have. He suggested we run the whisky down the lake from Canada to my camp, then bring it on here and hide it in the vault. He never played fair with us; he cheated us again and again. That's why Briffeur suggested we break into the house and see if he had told the truth about the amount of money he said he got for it. He kept the records of all our sales in his safe. We tried to—you know the rest about the robbery."

His voice trailed off into a whisper. I recalled that he had been shell-shocked, and wondered if he could stand the strain he was undergoing.

"The night I was at Currie's to dinner and met Mr. Bartley it was Slyke who called me up on the 'phone."

His voice was shrill now, and I thought he would break down at any moment.

"He said he wished to see me, and I started over here. I ran into Briffeur, who told me that Slyke had sold the rest of the whisky for $23,000. Well—where was I?" He stopped, confused, and passed his hand over his face.

"Oh, yes—the whisky. I went up to the tower, and he suggested we go out on the balcony—why, I don't know. I asked him what he got for the whisky, and he said $10,000. I knew he lied, and I told him so. We quarreled, quarreled— All at once, he flashed a revolver on me and said he had a good mind to kill me—he had been drinking—"

Again his voice trailed away into silence and his eyes closed. Then he recovered himself with an effort and continued. "Just what happened then, I don't know—don't know! My nerves have been in pieces since I was shell-shocked. We struggled, and I know I shot him. I did as you say. Took him downstairs, undressed him, and put the revolver in his hand. I knew—knew—that most people would think he had killed himself. I was desperately sorry—but I am hardly to blame for his death. My big mistake was calling in Mr. Bartley the next morning. I knew, if I could fool him, I could fool everyone."

He paused; his head sank again into his hands. I saw that Bartley pitied him deeply and his voice was soft and his face grave as he asked, "And Briffeur?"

With an effort the doctor raised his head.

"I was always afraid of that man. He was cruel and treacherous. When I saw him at the inquest I knew that all was over; that he would give me away. And when the lights went out, in a wild rage I threw that knife. I don't know why." Then he almost yelled, "I wanted peace."

"But how did you happen to have the knife with you?" Bartley asked.

He thought for a moment. It seemed hard for him to gather himself together enough to answer, "I don't know—oh, yes, I had used it to cut a strap on my car. When I arrived here the day of the inquest, I found I had left it on the floor and I put it in my bag. There was a bag on the table all the time, you remember."

It was easy to see that the doctor was in such a nervous collapse that he could say no more; he slumped down in his chair and closed his eyes. There was some whispered conversation between Roche and Bartley; and then, as if not liking the task, Roche went over and placed his hand on the doctor's shoulder. At his touch the doctor stiffened. He knew too well what it meant. Shaking off the hand, he slowly rose and walked, with an effort, to where Bartley stood.

"Mr. Bartley," he said, his voice trembling, "will you shake hands with me? I bear you no ill will. It's a long journey before me."

Into Bartley's eyes came a look of comprehending pity, and even admiration. He grasped his hand and silently the two men, one a murderer, the other the detective that had apprehended him, looked into each other's eyes. Then slowly their hands fell apart and Roche led Doctor King from the room.

None of us spoke until Bartley broke the silence by saying, almost in a whisper, "Poor chap! God alone knows what he has gone through."

Suddenly Currie demanded, "John, what about those slates and that awful ghost? I never was so scared in my life."

For the first time a smile crossed Bartley's face.

"The slates? Why I wrote the messages."

"You! But we washed them," Currie exclaimed.

"Surely, you washed them. That was the whole trick. I wrote those messages with a camel's hair brush in hydrochloric acid with a bit of zinc in it. When that mixture is washed with water, the writing is blotted out until the slate dries again. You remember I always washed one side first; that was the side with the writing on it. Then I let you wash the other; and, of course, that made you sure that there was nothing on the slate. Had you not seen it washed with your own eyes? When the slate dried, the writing simply reappeared."

Miss Potter had been sitting, overcome by what had taken place. But as Bartley's explanation ceased she cried, "Then I did not receive a message from Mr. Slyke?"

"No, Miss Potter," Bartley said apologetically, "you did not. You must forgive me. I knew that King was guilty, and I had to make him confess by frightening or startling him. He half believed in spiritualism, and I thought that if I could stage a seance I might make him confess. There was a medium in New York I had once saved from jail and I brought him here with two assistants."

"But the raps?" she questioned.

"Oh, I produced the raps. Almost all of that sort of thing is a fake, you know. You remember that I had you place your hand on the table. Then I rose and turned out the lights. When I came back I slipped you the thumb and little finger of my right hand. You thought, of course, that both my hands were being held. They were not. You only held one, while the other was free to give the raps. The medium was tied and gagged, but you can't tie one of those chaps so surely that they cannot speak and move when they want to."

Currie gave a long sigh of disappointment. "Then I never saw a ghost at all?"

"No, Bob," came the answer, "you did not. Everything was staged to lead up to the words you heard that figure say. What you saw was one of the medium's assistants painted with phosphorus so that he would glow in the dark. He was covered with a black velvet bag, made in sections; and another man, wearing black gloves and a mask to make him invisible, removed the sections of the bag one by one. This gave him the appearance of materializing suddenly out of the air. The head was a mask modeled from a photograph of Slyke. When the figure vanished, the second man had simply covered him from head to foot with a black cloth, thus blotting him from your sight. The whole trick has been used again and again by so-called mediums."

Black rose to his feet saying, "Mr. Bartley, you have solved three problems by one solution—the two murders and the robbery."

As Bartley was about to answer the telephone rang and he left the room as if he had anticipated the message. We could hear his cool, low voice say, "Yes, this is Mr. Bartley. Yes, Roche. No. I am not surprised. It's the best thing, after all, that could have happened."

When he returned to us his face was very grave and sad, yet with something of relief in it.

"Roche tells me," he said slowly, "that when he reached the station King was dead. Suicide."

The news did not startle me. I, too, felt relieved. Bartley was silent a moment, playing with the bag before him on the table. Suddenly he raised his head.

"You know he wished to say goodby to me. I knew then what he was going to do. I could have had him searched and have prevented it, but it is better so. He has not been himself for months; we will never know all that he has suffered. I am sorry for him. What a great darkness must have covered his life for the last few days! Now it is over."

He was silent again for a moment, and then added, "He took the best way out of the affair."

[THE END]

Causes of Mental Decay.

The failure of the mind in old age is often less the result of natural decay, than of disuse. Ambition has ceased to operate; contentment brings indolence, and indolence decay of mental power, ennui, and sometimes death. Men have been known to die, literally speaking, of disease induced by intellectual vacancy.—Sir B. Brodie.

Ravages of the Pine Beetle.

During the last ten years in southern Oregon and northern California, the western pine beetle is estimated to have killed over $3,600,000 worth of merchantable pine timber, or 50 times as much as has been killed by fire in the same time.

Indorse.

The children were required to use ten words in sentences as part of their home work in spelling. "Indorse" was one of the words. On one paper appeared the following sentence: "As the weather is stormy, we will have to stay indorse this winter."

GREAT NORTHERN VALUATION SHOWS NO "WATER"

In response to assertions that railroad stocks were watered and that the investments recorded in the companies' books were inflated, Congress, in 1913, by the La Follette Act, directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine, among other things, the cost of reproduction new, cost of reproduction less depreciation, and the value of the various railroads in the United States.

The corporate assets of the Great Northern Company consists of two classes of property: One is the physical property used for transportation purposes and located in the United States; the other consists of investments in stocks and bonds of other companies, including lines located in Canada, and other miscellaneous property used for non-carrier purposes. The Interstate Commerce Commission recently has completed its tentative valuation of the first of these, that is, the physical property used for transportation purposes and located in the United States. It has not valued the second class of property because not required to do so by the terms of the Act.

The value as found by the Commission for Great Northern properties used for transportation purposes and located in the United States as of June 30, 1915, was as follows:

Total owned	$391,740,302.00
Total used	395,359,655.00

In arriving at these figures, the Interstate Commerce Commission deducted $65,140,474.00 from the cost of reproduction new on account of assumed depreciation. The Company, of course, contends that the depreciation of certain parts of the property, such as the aging of its roadbed, is more than offset by the appreciation of the property as a whole, as it is well known that a railroad property in use for several years is better and worth more for transportation purposes than a newly built property.

Included in the second class of property and not valued by the Commission is:

- 604 miles of railroad in Canada.
- Nearly 49 per cent of the stock of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.
- One-half of the stock of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway.
- Also the stocks of some other smaller railway companies, and the stocks of coal, lumber, land and other subsidiary corporations.

The investment in securities not valued by the Commission amounts to $227,076,312.83. Other property not used for transportation purposes amount to $24,315,418.31, so that the Commission's value on the first class of property, plus the value of the second class of property, which the Commission did not value, amounts to $643,132,033.14.

Since the valuation date, June 30, 1915, there has been added $82,259,790.52, which brings the total value of Great Northern property to January 1, 1923, up to $725,391,823.66. The total par value of stocks and bonds of the Great Northern as of January 1, 1923, was $540,978,319.04, showing an excess of $184,413,504.62 of value above the total capitalization. The following table makes these statements clear:

PROPERTY		CAPITALIZATION
Portion of owned property valued by the Commission as of June 30, 1915	$391,740,302.00	Great Northern Stock	$249,477,150.00
Stocks, bonds and other properties not valued by Commission as of June 30, 1915	227,076,312.83	Great Northern Bonds	291,501,169.04
Other property as of June 30, 1915	24,315,418.31	Excess of Property Over Capitalization on January 1, 1923	184,413,504.62
Property added since June 30, 1915	82,259,790.52
Total	$725,391,823.66		$725,391,823.66

This furnishes a most conclusive answer to the charge of watered stock.

The Great Northern never did have and never will have a dollar of watered stock.

LOUIS W. HILL,
Chairman of the Board.

Auto Accidents

Glaring headlights and fast driving were partly the causes of two terrible accidents the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Vinge and two little girls and Julius Johnson of Newfolden had a narrow escape from death Friday night. They were returning from Thief River Falls about 11 o'clock at night when they met a car about two miles south of Holt. The bright lights of the car blinded them so they could not tell how far they were out of the road. The auto which was a Ford Sedan, struck a large stone and turned over two or three times and was completely smashed. All were stunned and one little girl was so badly injured she is still in the hospital, but the others are alright again.

Parties searching for a pocket book supposed to have been lost at the time of the accident, found instead of that, a bottle of moonshine.

An auto smash between Middle River and Strathcona Saturday resulted in a broken collar bone for a tobacco salesman and a broken back for a young man who is the son of the manager of the Brummund hotel. We understand the young man died Tuesday from his injuries.

Tom Severson of Radium was in town Wednesday.

Arthur Bakke of Sherburn came Saturday to visit Walmer Risberg.

Miss Mabel Folden went to Thief River Falls Tuesday to consult an oculist.

Herb Walker came Monday to take personal charge of the butcher shop. We wish him success.

Elsie Johnson of Minneapolis arrived one day last week to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Erik Johnson, and family.

We begin a new continued story this week on our inside page.

Dr. Mellby was called Monday night to see Mrs. Oswald Hoell who was very sick.

Mrs. Peter Hanson and two of the children departed Tuesday for Duluth to visit relatives.

Mrs. Chas. Hagglund and children went to Grand Forks, N. Dak., Saturday to visit relatives.

Mrs. J. Faiman brot her husband home from the hospital Saturday and he seems to be very much better.

Ben Nyberg returned home Friday from Seattle, Wash. where he had been working for several months.

Miss Albertina Nyberg was married at Chadron, Neb., on Monday to Olaf Erickson, a railroad man of that city.

Mrs. Renio Werner and baby went to Badger Friday to visit her sister, Mrs. John Hagberg and family, over Sunday.

Several of our business men and farmers with their families joined the auto tour to the experiment farm at Crookston yesterday.

Rev. Ordahl and family returned home Wednesday night from a visit with relatives and friends in the twin cities and other points along the road.

Mr. and Mrs. John Jordahl and Mrs. Gustave Erickson and two daughters all of Thief River Falls visited Sunday at the John Simonson home.

Mrs. Martin Mattson and children left Tuesday for a visit with her brother M. T. Olson and wife at Crookston, and her husband's sister and family in So. Dak.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Monson and son Henry, and daughter, Mrs. Calvert Enger all of Randen, came Saturday for an over Sunday visit at the home of his son, Ludwig Monson and family.

T. B. Folden and Chas. Skoglund have been helping Olaf Eide to weigh the grain at the Farmers elevator this week, so as to report the amount on hand at the annual meeting next Tuesday.

G. Sanoden and family and Mrs. J. Nelson visited Sunday with the C. L. Heinze family at Thief River Falls. The latter are rushing their new house towards completion and have it ready for the plasterers.

Now before haying starts in you will need some repairs, or maybe a new Mower or a new Rake. The Holt Farmers Elevator Co., is expecting a carload of Twine, Binders, Mowers, Rakes, and a full line of repairs. Give us a call.

The Death Reaper.

The people of Holt and vicinity were greatly shocked upon hearing the sad news of the death of Mrs. Caurin Hevle, which occurred at the Thief River hospital last Thursday afternoon, where she had been taken the previous Monday for treatment.

A baby boy was born at the time his mother died but only lived three hours. Mrs. Hevle was much respected and beloved by her many acquaintances and it was with sad hearts that her friends and relatives were called upon to part with her so early, when life seemed so full of promise and happiness for her and those most dearest to her.

Her Faith was anchored on the Rock Christ Jesus and she died as she lived, trusting in His Salvation.

Funeral services were conducted at the home and the Holt Lutheran church Monday afternoon, Rev. Hjelmeland of Newfolden officiating and interment was made in the Holt cemetery.

Mabel Knutson was born in October 1892 near Gary, Minn., and moved with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. K. T. Knutson and family to Marshall county about 14 years ago.

She taught school for 8 years in Norman and Marshall county. She was united in marriage with Caurin Hevle in October 1920 and they had since then made their home on a farm 4 miles east of Newfolden.

Relatives present at the funeral from a distance were: Mrs. Bronsberg, Mr. and Mrs. Bagne and children, and G. Gilbertson of Gary, Mrs. Henry Hermanson of Fertile, Mr. and Mrs. Westberg and two daughters of Bagley. There were also a number of friends present from Gary and Thief River Falls.

The News, with the many friends extends deep and sincere sympathy to the grief stricken husband, parents and other sorrowing relatives.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Erickson at the Warren hospital Friday. The little one lived about a day and passed away Saturday afternoon. The remains were brot home Sunday by the father and friends and funeral services were conducted at the home Monday forenoon by Rev. Raaum and the babe was laid to rest in the local cemetery.

The News joins the friends in extending sympathy to the grief stricken parents.

At last reports, Mrs. Erickson was getting along as well as could be expected.

Harald Johnson returned to his home in Greenbush Saturday afternoon.

We had some rain Wednesday night and a good hard one again yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. J. A. Sorum will entertain the Free Mission Ladies Aid at her home Sunday afternoon.

Silos were shipped in this week for Fred Voth, John Holst, Arno Steinhauer and Carl Lindholm.

The Zion Ladies Aid will meet with Mrs. Ole B. Johnson Sunday June 24th, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. All invited.

Helmer Dogerness returned Saturday from Ardock, N. Dak. Albert Knutson had charge of the dredge work during his absence.

At a special meeting of the village council held Saturday night Emil Simonson was awarded the contract for grading and graveling the half mile of road just south of town for $605.00.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"A—BARATARIA! LAFITTE!"

"I am Lafitte again—not Monsieur Sazarac! Irons, and then the yard-arm for the first fellow who disputes my will. The older heads will not needs be told. The English woman first—after that, as it is Monsieur de Almonaster's honor to his fellow citizens of Louisiana—for Bonaparte. And then—"

"The seas are wide," grimaced Jarvis with a look at the master which drew, in turn, a glance of impenetrable reserve.

This is a stirring tale of the picturesque days when the young Creole bloods of New Orleans rallied around Lafitte—the redoubtable pirate of Barataria Bay who won imperishable fame by coming to the aid of Andrew Jackson when that red-headed warrior beat off the British at New Orleans—and planned the rescue of Napoleon from St. Helena.

"I have been hailed a hero by the city, pardoned and acclaimed for service in the new Republic, denounced again and harried from the seas, to be once more a fugitive!" says Lafitte—and chooses to come back as "Captain Sazarac," only to have his heart stirred by a lovely face—which leads him to the Plot Napoleon.

The author—Charles Tenney Jackson, has achieved a number of deservedly popular and wide-read novels. Queerly enough, though he is by birth and education a northerner, he has reproduced most wonderfuly the atmosphere of those New Orleans days before the Yankee came to destroy romance—days when fair ladies were still the cause of many a duel and high gambling went with high station.

CHAPTER I

—1—

If Jean Were Here.

The affair was one in which, to this point, the young Count de Almonaster had taken the slightest interest. But now the name of his aunt, the Baroness Pontalba, was upon the lips of the portly alderman of Old New Orleans; and when, in turn, Beluche, the swarthy admiral of the Cartagenian privateers, adverted to her, the languid aristocrat shook with laughter.

"Ho, Monsieur Dominique! You, the fat and prosperous counselor of the American quarter who, they say, finds the city's politics even better picking than were your days of piracy with Jean Lafitte—you, you, then, it was, who enticed my good aunt to giving ten thousand of the new Yankee dollars to build the house in which Napoleon is to spend his last days on the rue Chartres! And you—Beluche—for whom, even today, any flag will serve! A grand scheme, this, to rescue Bonaparte from the English! What next for us fantastic Creoles?"

"Monsieur! Not so loud, I beg! An affair of state, this, and half the gentry of Louisiana is in it. But the new American governor—eh, bien! At Washington, where the English are now so well received, it might be embarrassing—this plot—"

But De Almonaster shouted the louder. The admiral of Cartagena spluttered; the honest councilor rubbed his velvet-clad paunch and pleaded for silence. The young man's glance went from the two one-time buccaneers out the door of Maspero's exchange to the shining new plaster and green shutters of the House Napoleon; his hand went to the black silk stock at his neck to check further amusement.

Beluche—short, dark, restlessly glancing about, his black eyes narrowing as if he would be done with talk and to sea again—growled surlily. Admiral of the New Granada rebels he might be, but to his old cronies of the coffee-houses he was still the Baratarian gunner who fought the pirates' battery on the right of Jackson's line at Chalmette against the British; and he made as wry a face as any of Lafitte's lieutenants when the grateful young republic of the North pardoned the buccaneers en masse.

But the worthy Alderman Dominique sighed at the younger man's jeers.

"We had thought, Monsieur, that—being of what is conceded to be the proudest family of Louisiana—you would lend generously to the plot—"

"Plot!" Again the Count Raoul mocked as he looked across the cobbles at the fresh paint upon the huge wooden shutters of the House Napoleon; he flung his jeweled fingers airily back to the shadowy tap-room: "Ho, fellow! The rum and limes! Be on with them, but tread softly—we have a plot!"

The two old adventurers gazed at the slender figure in some consternation. "Plot!" De Almonaster made the rafters ring with it: "Threescore carpenters, plasterers and whatnot, slaves and free men of color—labor all summer at this royal domicile; the very fig sellers of the Place d'Armes mewl away about it to sailormen of every sea—I, myself, across the Caribbean, or at Port Royal, am questioned as to what the bravos of New Orleans mean by this madness; and when I come home I am enticed to a public house, and whispered to of a—plot!"

"Eh, bien! it is a plot—" Old Dominique rubbed his nose. "We have the money, the ship, the spirit, the—well, everything."

"Except the emperor! Bonaparte, cooped up on his isle with England watching! Pray, good sirs—who will bell the cat?"

The admiral shrugged and tasted his limed rum of Barbadoes. The young De Almonaster heard two dolorous sighs. It was, indeed, a quiet life and a shameful pass when two worthy buccaneers of but a decade agone sat at their drink to be jibed by an incredulous aristocrat.

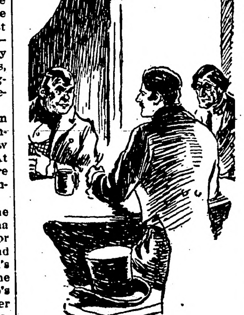
"Eh, well—" mumbled old Dominique absently. "If Jean were here he would go rescue Napoleon for these Creoles. Ho, old cutthroat, if the Captain Lafitte walked these streets again there would be an end to chatter! Eh, the old days! The good wine and the plunder down the Barataria passes! And I—name of God!—am now the alderman for the American quarter!"

The shadows lengthened across the cobbles to the pretentious House Napoleon. The dim front barroom of La Bourse de Maspero was quite deserted, save for a table of provincial planters from the river parishes here and there. But suddenly the drone of voices from the gaming place in the rear was cut off by a slamming door.

A man had staggered out. Tall, uncouth, of disorderly attire, not at all in the fashion, ragged at the sleeves—he stared at them with swollen eyes set in a drink-flushed face. The empty scabbard of a small sword rattled at his muddy boot-tops; his silken-lined cloak and round velvet cap gave him the aspect of a rather solemn and nervous poseur.

"Devil take the dice!" He saw the elegant De Almonaster, and came briskly nearer: "Back with me, Raoul—watch! An affair, Raoul, that will call me out to the Oaks sleepy-eyed some morning this week. The stranger, Sazarac, has the English colonel bewitched. A Sazarac!—I wish something more than drink could draw all eyes to me! A pistoling fellow, eh bien!"

John Jarvis thrust his blinking eyes nearer: "A rapier bully, Messieurs—such as this Sazarac . . . there's a woman in it without doubt."



"A Grand Scheme, This, to Rescue Bonaparte From the English! What Next for Us Fantastic Creoles?"

The town's first bohemian of the arts and letters, a graceless scribbler, painter—wastrel of the wine-shops, for all he was the nephew of the great John Wesley in England. He slept, worked and ate in a dirty studio up on the rue Conti, where, unknown as yet to the world, there labored a young assistant who painted backgrounds for Jarvis' portraits, but who was destined for fame when the gamesters and politicians of the New Orleans of 1821 had been long forgotten—Monsieur Audubon, but lately arrived from the Indies.

Jarvis tipped the table for a drink, looking about to see who might pay the score. "Pistols—" he grunted. "I trust this Sazarac wings the Britisher at least, though if he does, I shall see liquor from his veins and not blood. The fellow can drink more than I, which is intolerable. It reflects on my reputation. . . . I shall challenge, myself, if Sazarac does not!"

"They are to fight?" queried De Almonaster languidly.

"They will. I know the course of these affairs. I attend them all, Raoul. I am the black buzzard who is earliest to roost at the Dueling Oaks and wish them bad luck—all."

The first bohemian of the Vieux Carre rubbed his nose: "Another drink, Monsieur? Wait—we shall go in presently when the affair becomes provocative. This Sazarac has a steady eye, and Colonel Carr is bent upon an insult."

De Almonaster shrugged his distaste: "I was speaking of the new sugar process at Monsieur Bore's—"

"Oh, no!" returned Jarvis airily. "You were discussing the plot. Why sit with Dominique, the alderman, and Beluche, the admiral, save upon our nice intrigue? Ho!" he reared suddenly, so that the glasses quivered: "Be discreet!—our plot Napoleon!"

The two former buccaneers looked wryly at him. "The devil take you, Jarvis," growled Beluche. "It was of old days, and our vanished captain. You, yourself, whom Jean rescued from perdition once—"

"The plot!" shouted Jarvis so loudly that even bystanders across the cobbled way looked into the shadowy portals of Maspero's. "Ah, I am going to my studio, gentlemen! I have an idea! My new assistant is very clever at painting birds—Monsieur Audubon is crazy to paint birds! He sprinkles salt on their tails to catch them. Now I shall take our plot to the studio, and Monsieur Audubon shall paint salt upon it to catch the Emperor Napoleon."

The two worthies glowered upon him. De Almonaster's idle laugh rang out. He, too, arose with Jarvis, and the latter could not resist a last gibe at his cronies. "The alderman and the admiral—and in the one picture that I cared about, done down at Lafitte's red fort before the Americans plundered it, I had the bad taste to paint them in with my captain! What a downfall!—from piracy to politics for Dominique; and old Beluche blustering about having a lawful commission!" He put an unsteady finger on the laughing De Almonaster's sleeve: "Come on, Raoul! There is no more romance since Lafitte abandoned the town to the steamboat Yankees; and yet, last evening, upon the Esplanade, I saw a woman's face. I—Raoul—unshaven, dirty, idle—looked back at her coach. I, Raoul—hanging to a lamp-post—made her smile!"

De Almonaster motioned the jester toward the gaming rooms. "The lady who arrived with the British colonel's party? Of course—I am told she had the gallants astir when she drove."

Jarvis nodded absently: "They are wishing no bad luck to Colonel Carr beyond that this Sazarac shoots him tomorrow at the Oaks. Eh, well—come!"

From the door they could see the throng in La Bourse de Maspero. The wide door of the small room was packed with silent, attentive youths.

Jarvis twitched the coat of the nearest. "What has happened, De Marigny? Is the devil still dicing as to which to take?"

"Carr loses steadily." Young Marigny had but recently attained fame by naming a street of the Faubourg Marigny—his patrimony now being cut into lots and sold to the insatiable Americans outside the city walls—"Rue de Bagatelle," to commemorate his losses at the game. He therefore parted the skirts of his bottle-green coat, thrust his hands upon his breeches of snow-white leather and tapped them significantly: "A ruined man. Eh, bien! The British consul, Langhorne, protested, seemingly very uncomfortable at Colonel Carr's insistence at play with this Captain Sazarac, who, it is said, is a mere professional gambler of the river packets with the manners of a gentleman. I will say he has acted so—he tried in every way to avoid Carr's game, but it appears that the British officer involved himself badly on the way from St. Louis."

"How then?" ventured De Almonaster. "A professional gamester at Maspero's?"

"Carr, himself, introduced the fellow; the game must continue," young De Marigny shrugged; "and there is talk of some affair of women between the two!"

"The lady who looked back from her coach—" mused Jarvis to himself. "I must get me a new waistcoat."

A massive silver candelabrum cast a ruby light upon the cloth about which sat a quartette: Langhorne, His Majesty's consul; a dealer of Maspero's; Colonel Carr of the newly arrived British mission en route to the Mexicoes; and the stranger from the West.

"Sazarac—" muttered De Marigny, "whose fame at the cards has overleaped the town in one night. Mark him, Raoul!—a peruke, whitened as silver! Where has the fellow been these years as to know not the fashions?"

"Three thousand dollars on the red against the bond girl!"

Argentina.

Argentina, or the Argentine Republic, has an area of 1,135,840 square miles and a population of about 7,500,000. The resources include forests of hardwood in the north, pine forests in the Andes region; coal is found; but the chief sources of wealth are agriculture and the pastures. Large numbers of sheep and cattle are raised; dairying is important, and the chief crops are wheat, linseed, oats, barley, rye, and Indian corn. In some parts sugar cane and fruits are cultivated.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Austin—Reports of damage done by the storm show that at least 36 head of livestock were lost.

Winona—The largest class in the history of Winona high school was graduated when 103 students received diplomas at exercises here.

Albert Lea—The Community Recreation association of this city announced that four city parks will be thrown open to recreational purposes.

Glenwood—Glenwood defeated the All Nation baseball team 4 to 2 in the first game and the All Nations defeated Glenwood 14 to 2 in the second of the series.

Red Wing—Judge S. J. Nelson, in justice court here, ruled that a city ordinance, under which the city of Red Wing closed six soft drink parlors last April, was valid.

Rochester—Rev. J. Robert Hargreaves, pastor of the Congregational church here, has announced his resignation from the pastorate, to take effect July 1.

Alexandria—Alvin Ousley, national commander of the American Legion, will address the convention of the seventh district American Legion of Minnesota here. The convention opens Monday.

Albert Lea—Being attacked by an enraged buck deer that charged their automobile, was the unusual experience of four Albert Lea delegates to the Bemidji state firemen's convention.

Albert Lea—Nearly 100 members of the Numedalslaget from over the entire state, attended the opening session here of that organization. R. C. Riererson, of Belview, Minn., president of the lag, spoke.

Montevideo—Driving a pair of oxen, hitched to an old covered wagon of the type familiar 50 years ago, the Rev. G. S. Froiland of Dawson, prominent Lutheran pastor, arrived in Montevideo to take part in the Upper Minnesota Valley pageant.

Mankato—When the old cornerstone of St. John's Episcopal church was opened here many interesting relics of the days of '66 were brought to light. In the pages of a Bible placed in the stone when it was laid, Aug. 15, 1866, a collection of "shin plasters" of Civil war days were found.

Sunrise—Chisago County Farm bureau had its annual picnic here, 3,000 attending. C. W. Ringer, chief of the Minneapolis fire department, and a native of Harris, six miles east of here, attended the picnic, bringing with him the Minneapolis Firemen's band, which was a feature of the picnic.

Dilworth—Mrs. Minnie Spotts, justice of the peace, continued her battle against speeders who shoot through Dilworth while en route to the lakes country, when she fined 33 motorists $5 each in the last week. Two weeks ago she fined 40 in one day.

Owatonna—This city will again be the scene of the annual reunion of southern Minnesota's wartime National Guard regiment when the Veterans' association of the 136th Infantry will meet here, July 23. Colonel W. T. Mollison of Minneapolis, wartime commander of the regiment, will be present.

Albert Lea—The Freeborn County Holstein & Guernsey Breeders' association held its annual outing. Forty automobile loads of cattle breeders visited practically every farm in the county breeding Holstein and Guernsey stock. Several prominent business men of this city accompanied the cattlemen on their trip.

Pipestone—Mystery surrounds the finding of eight large sticks of dynamite under the floor of the Methodist dining hall at the county fair grounds here. The dynamite was discovered by workmen who were engaged in moving the building to make room for a large concrete grandstand which is in course of construction.

Austin—The last class to graduate from the Austin high school, that of '23, numbering 103, will be added formally to the alumni body at the annual meeting and banquet of the alumni association. The oldest alumnus to attend will be Mrs. N. F. Banfield, class of '79, whose children are all members of the association.

St. Paul—Common barberry bushes which have survived the eradication campaign in Minnesota, are rusting badly this year, according to observations made by plant disease experts at the University Farm. This is the infection which later appears on the grain in the form of black stem rust. The barberry population of the state has been greatly decreased by eradication activities during the past few years but there are still enough bushes left to start damaging local epidemics if weather conditions are right.

Cloquet—Club women have completed plans for the eighth district convention of the Minnesota Federation of Women's clubs and the entertainment of the delegates and visitors. Mrs. James Fleming, president of the Women's Friday club, which with the Mothers' club will be hostess, is one of the most active in the arrangements.

Wabasso—What is believed to have been the largest picnic in this section in years, was conducted at Troske Grove, three miles from here, when 10,000 persons attended the annual Brown County Farm Bureau picnic.

Winona—More than 6,000 persons attended the annual picnic of the Winona county farm bureau near this city.

Luverne—The 35th annual convention of the fifth district Minnesota Women's Christian Temperance union will be conducted in this city.

Albert Lea—The New Salem Lutheran church here has been formally dedicated. Work on the structure completed with installation of a pipe organ and church furniture.

Lake City—Nine thousand persons attended the all-Wabasha county picnic at Camp Lakeview, near here. Business houses in towns throughout the county were closed for the occasion.

Mankato—The Rev. G. G. Bennett, bishop of Duluth, delivered the commencement address before 150 graduates of Mankato Teachers college at graduation exercises in the Presbyterian church in this city.

Owatonna—About 200 Elks, accompanied by the Elks band, made a motor tour to 11 cities and villages to the north and east of the city as another movement in its program to spread interest in the Fourth of July celebration.

St. Peter—The Nicollet county Aggie Alumni association, composed of former agricultural college students of the University of Minnesota, had its annual picnic at Swan lake, near here, despite a fall of rain. A crowd of about 400 attended.

Olivia—Ole Kelley, aged 68, a farmer near here, probably was fatally injured when he was attacked and gored by an angry bull. Kelley was seriously crushed about the head, body and legs, and may not recover from the injuries.

Willmar—The Willmar Sash and Door factory was damaged to the amount of several thousand dollars in a fire which is believed to have started from defective wiring. The damage was mostly confined to the building and machinery.

Northfield—Organization of the Rice County Co-operative Egg and Poultry association will be perfected as soon as a membership of 500 is obtained, Hagbarth Bue, president of the Rice County Farm Bureau association, announced, in launching an intensive campaign for the necessary membership.

OWSLEY SCORES ARMY REDUCTION

Legion Head, Speaking at Devils Lake Camp, Declares Army is Too Small.

DUNCAN INSPECTS MEN

Guardsmen in Camp Are Praised by Commanding General After Inspection—Says Efficiency Is Remarkably Good.

Devils Lake, N. D.—Alvin M. Owsley, national commander of the American Legion, speaking before the encampment of the North Dakota National Guard here, bitterly assailed persons who seek to tear down American military forces, who demand the recognition of Soviet Russia and who would strive toward replacing the present form of American government with a communistic system.

The speaker lauded the aims and purposes of the American Legion and in this connection he said: "The purposes of the Legion is to make over the country; we are dedicated to the building of a mighty nation, stronger in mind and firmer in heart than ever before to prepare the way to enlightened citizenship. Let no man boast too much of his generation. We are the products of the sacrifices of all men and women who have gone before. Great is our inheritance."

Nestos Praised.

Commander Owsley praised Governor R. A. Nestos, who preceded him on the platform, for his stand taken against illiteracy and the methods he has suggested to combat it.

The army is too small, according to the speaker. He said congress was wrong in reducing the personnel of the army to 150,000 men. In praising the National Guard, he said: "I take off my hat to you men in the National Guard in this state. You fought with the regulars in the war and taught the regulars that there were real fighting men in the Guard."

Commends N. D. Guard.

Following the address, the 164th regiment, North Dakota National Guard, was reviewed by General A. B. Duncan, commander of the seventh army corps area, and Colonel Harry Eaton of the general staff, and Colonel Frank Halstead in charge of National Guard affairs. Also of the reviewing party were Governor Nestos, Lieutenant Governor Frank Hyland, Commander Owsley, Adjutant General G. A. Fraser, Colonel A. B. Jackson, Jr., of the governor's staff; Mack V. Traynor, state commander of the American Legion, and Jack Williams, state adjutant, American Legion.

"The 164th is one of the best bodies of men I have ever seen," said General Duncan. "They showed remarkable efficiency in view of the short time they have been in training."

General Duncan was pleased with the camp site, he said.

PREUS LEADS IN PRIMARY

Minnesota Governor Apparent Choice of Voters for U. S. Senator.

St. Paul, Minn.—Nomination of Governor J. A. O. Preus for the United States senate on the Republican ticket was indicated in returns available today from Monday's state-wide special primary in Minnesota.

When 1,083 of the state's 3,520 precincts had reported Preus had a lead of 11,000 votes over Oscar Hallam, former justice of the state supreme court, and attaches of Hallam headquarters here "unofficially" conceded Preus' nomination.

In 594 precincts, on the Farmer-Labor senatorial contest, Fritsche had 11,438 votes; Johnson 10,386, and Lindbergh 3,239. These precincts were in sixty counties.

State Senator James A. Carley won the Democratic nomination by an overwhelming margin over Francis C. Carey of Minneapolis.

Returns from 609 of the state's 3,520 precincts, scattered throughout 61 of the 87 counties in Minesota, showed the following vote in the Republican senatorial contest: Preus, 14,710; Hallam, 11,118; Schall, 6,270; Anderson, 5,445; Power, 5,272; Burnquist, 2,098; Lundeen, 1,619; Steenerson, 642; Martin, 209.

The three winners in the primary will contest in the July 16 final election for the unexpired term of the late Knute Nelson, the senior United States senator from Minesota, whose term expires March 4, 1925. A six-year term senator to succeed Nelson will be elected in the 1924 fall election.

British Get Oil Concession.

Buenos Aires.—A dispatch to La Nacion says the Bolivian government has signed a concession involving twelve million hectares of land on the Bolivia-Brazil frontier in favor of the Bolivian Oil Land Syndicate, a British concern. The concessionaires undertake to build a port and shipyards at Laguna, and to establish river navigation to this city. They are also to construct a railway, mineral ore smelting plants, saw mills, and will settle 3,000 European families in the territory.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

Now Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Washington, D. C.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved me from an operation which a physician said I would have to have for a very bad case of female trouble. My system was all run down for two years after my little girl was born. Then I read of your wonderful medicine and decided to try it. I could hardly drag one foot after the other, and after taking six bottles of the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I now do all my housework, also washing and ironing, and do not know what real trouble is. My health is fine, and I weigh 140 pounds. When I started taking it I weighed 97 pounds. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any one who is suffering from female trouble or is run down. You may use this testimonial for I am only too glad to let suffering women know what the Vegetable Compound did for me."—Mrs. IDA HEWITT, 1529 Penna. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C.

Such letters from women in every section of this country prove beyond question the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

He Hugs Wrong Mother.

Mother had been residing in the country and I went down to the train to meet her. When the train unloaded its passengers I spied her standing with her black traveling bag on the platform. She had on the same blue suit and red hat as when she left.

I went up behind her, put my arms around her, and was about to kiss her when a surprised voice said: "Well, sah, I think you-all's made a big mistake." It was a colored woman. All the people on the platform laughed. I finally found mother wearing a silk dress and hastily led her away to our auto.—Chicago Tribune.

Hers, but Secondhand.

A woman was sitting in the park with her stepson and little daughter.

Another woman stopped to watch the two children playing and asked, "Your children?"

"The girl is," was the reply.

At this Natalie looked at her mother reprovingly and said, "Why, mamma, Willie is your child, too. He's your secondhand child."

Theological Problem.

"Mother, s'posing I died, should I go to heaven?"

"Yes, dear."

"S'posing I died because a big bear swallowed me; would he have to go too?"

Washington—There are 5,000 vacant beds in government hospitals for disabled veterans of the war, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, director of the United States Veterans' bureau announced in denial of reports of insufficient accommodations. The problem now confronting the veterans' bureau, he said, is making a survey in the different hospital areas throughout the country so that available beds may be apportioned to sections where they are most needed.

Washington—The Treasury received the first regular semi-annual payments to be made by any foreign governments of principal and interest on loans made by the United States during the war. Great Britain and Finland, the former the largest debtor and the latter among the smallest, began the reduction of their obligation under recently negotiated settlements which afford them 62 years to complete repayment. Great Britain's remittance, made in Liberty bonds, purchased in the open market, amounted to $69,000,000.

Domestic

Los Angeles—Vera Steadman, motion picture actress, was granted a divorce from Jackie Taylor, orchestra leader, in superior court. She charged cruelty.

New York—A cashier of the Pullman company and his body guard were robbed of a $22,000 payroll by six armed men as they were entering the Sunnyside Works at Long Island City.

Pocahontas, Ill.—Four armed men in an automobile kidnaped John Green, postoffice messenger, escaping with a mail pouch which the messenger was carrying containing a $4,000 payroll of the Pocahontas Coal company.

Omaha, Neb.—With 500 feet of track washed out by the high water in the vicinity of Kennard, Washington county, traffic on the Northwestern railroad was demoralized.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The 1924 convention of the International Association of Police Chiefs will be held in Montreal, Canada, it was decided. Los Angeles, Chicago and Houston, Texas, made spirited bids for the meeting. Chief William P. Rutledge of Detroit was elected president.

Newark—Because a bottle, three-quarters full of Scotch whisky, given to a jury trying three men in federal court here for possessing liquor in violation of the Volstead law, came back empty, the district attorney's office faces the problem of how to try the same defendants convicted on the possession charge on a second complaint, alleging conspiracy. The jury disagreed in the latter case.

Great Falls, Mont.—Vacant chairs in the half filled banquet room which greeted Alvin M. Owsley, national commander of the American Legion, at a reception given in his honor by the combined civic and commercial and fraternal organizations, so disappointed him that he called attention to it when it came time to address the gathering. "I am disappointed in the vacant chairs," he said. "And there can be only one reason for it. You business men know too little of the American Legion and its power, aims and purposes. This is the first time since my tour that I have had to look at vacant chairs."

Cleveland—Alex Treschko, aged 29, said by federal officers to be an amateur photographer and the author of one of the most ingenious and dangerously realistic imitations of federal bank notes ever produced, is under arrest here.

San Francisco—Tom Mooney, serving a life sentence in San Quentin prison in connection with the San Francisco Preparedness day bomb explosion in 1916, was notified of his election here by local 764 of the Molders' union as a delegate from that body to the union's national convention in Cleveland next September.

New York—James E. Sheridan, Bronx resident, for years one of the uniformed pages on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange and more recently a telephone clerk for a stock exchange house, became a member of the exchange. He paid $91,000 for the seat of Charles G. Miller, doffed his uniform and stepped out on the floor as a trader on his own account.

New York—One hundred passengers on the excursion boat Keansburg scrambled for safety when an ebb tide threw the craft against an Ellis island ferry wharf projection. Portions of the boat and the ferry structure were torn away, but the damage was all above water. All on board were landed safely and the boat later made another journey to Keansburg, N. J.

Los Angeles—Mrs. Mary F. Spencer, aged 86, but of the seeming vigor of a woman of 30, set out from Riverside to scale the San Jacinto mountains in quest of rare botanical specimens for Harvard univeristy. She expects to roam the crags unaccompanied, and says she fails to see anything unusual in that.

Pana, Ill.—Joseph W. Wakefield, aged 84, a friend of Abraham Lincoln, and a grand nephew of John Morton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, died. He was a retired farmer from Shelby county.

Memphis—Nine barges loaded with coal, conveyed by the steamer Charles F. Richardson of the West Kentucky Coal company, sunk in the Mississippi river 60 miles north of Memphis when the steamer encountered a severe wind and rainstorm, it became known here when the boat reached Memphis. Officials of the company, whose headquarters are in this city, estimated the total loss at $60,000.

Sports

Troon—The British are again in possession of the Open championship trophy which has been in America for the past two years.

Great Falls, Mont.—The Dempsey-Gibbons fight at Shelby, Mont., July 4, was saved from financial failure when President G. H. Stanton, of the Stanton Trust and Savings bank advanced $50,000 and pledges were made for the other $50,000 to make up the $100,000 installment due Jack Kearns, manager of Dempsey. Kearns agreed to accept this money. The money was raised after an all-day session that lasted until after midnight.

New York—Reserved seats for the Jess Willard-Luis Firpo battle at Boyle's Thirty Acres, Jersey City, July 12, are on sale at Madison Square Garden. The prices will range from $3.30 to $16.50. The $1 and $2 general admission tickets will be put on sale the day of the fight. Promoter Rickard will have nearly 30,000 of these. Both Firpo and Willard have been insured for $100,000 against injury, sickness or death, Rickard announced.

Honolulu—Mariechen Wehselau of Honolulu, Hawaii, set the world's record for the 100 yard swim for women, covering the distance in 1 minute and 3 seconds, beating by two-fifths of a second the record established by Miss Ethelda Bleibtrey of New York city in 1921. Miss Wehselau will probably represent the United States in next year's Olympic meet.

Foreign

London—The Central News reported Gabriel D'Annunzio, poet warrior, on his way to join Mustapha Kemal Pasha in Turkey.

Nelson, B. C.—Major General Lord Aylmer, former inspector general of the Canadian forces, is dead at Queens Bay, Kootenay Lake.

London—A dispatch to the Daily Express from Tangier, Morocco, says that the Riff tribesmen have captured the Spanish advanced position at Tizziazza.

Moscow—United States Senator Smith W. Brookhart, of Iowa, has arrived here from Germany. He will devote some time to study of the Russian situation.

London—A dispatch to the Times from Jerusalem says 10 British gendarmes, returning after having escorted High Commissioner Sir Herbert Samuel to the northernmost Jewish colony, Mutallah, were ambushed by brigands. Two of the gendarmes were killed and two wounded and one was captured.

Berne, Switzerland—The Swiss government has made public a note from Soviet Russia, charging Switzerland with "moral complicity" in the recent assassination at Lausanne of the soviet envoy, Vorovsky.

Berlin—Five hundred million marks in 50,000 mark notes have been stolen from the federal money printing plant in Berlin. A reward of 1,000,000 marks has been offered for the return of the missing money or the identification of the thief.

Dublin—The minister of defense, General Richard Mulcahy, introduced in the Dail Eireann a pension bill authorizing compensation to the men who were wounded and the relatives of those killed in three periods of the fighting in southern Ireland. The first category includes the Easter week rising of 1916; the second dates from January, 1919, to December, 1921, when the Anglo-Irish treaty was signed, and the third comprise the period of strife since that time.

Bilbao, Spain—Communists and socialists came to blows in the provincial elections. Ernesto Garcia, president of the voters committee and a leading socialist, was killed.

Moscow—An official statement of the soviet government says all Jews who wish to join relatives in America may do so by applying for emigration passports.

Tokio—Great excitement followed reports here that the "Boy Emperor" of China had been kidnaped. There have been many rumors of a desire of the militarist party to restore him to the throne.

BURMUDA WILL BE LIQUOR PARK

Lamport and Holt Liners Will Store Liquors Before Entering U. S. Waters.

SAILORS GO ON STRIKE

High Wage Rumors From West and Opposition to Dry Ships Affecting Crews—Coal Burners Hardest Hit.

New York.—With the announcement that Bermuda would be made a parking station for liquor by the Lamport and Holt liners, plying between New York and Buenos Aires, rumors were revived that British and French transatlantic liners might use a Canadian port of call as a liquor depot.

Halifax was mentioned in connection with the British lines, and it was stated that French liners, plying between Havre and New York, might drop and take on liquor by tender at one of the French islands off New Foundland. Steamship officials could not be found at their offices to comment on the reports.

The Lamport and Holt line's action in making Bermuda a liquor station was the first step taken by a foreign steamship line to slack passengers' thirst since the latest treasury department ruling. The plan becomes effective July 14.

Some members of the crews of the Homeric and Carmania, which sailed for England, declared they would not return if they had to work on ships effected by the dry ruling; officers said forty sailors of the Homeric and three coal passers on the Carmania had deserted.

Desertions from the crew of the Celtic also were reported, an official of the White Star line attributing the situation to the fact that land jobs were paying better wages than the steamship companies. Coal burning ships were affected more by the desertions than oil-burning vessels, it was said, because of the easier work on oil burners.

The Holland-American liner Rotterdam, the crew of which also had been crippled by desertions, got away on schedule after the chief officer had succeeded in rounding up a full complement. Tales of high wages in factories of the middle west, spread along the water front by agents of industrial plants, the line's officials said, were held responsible.

EQUITY TO COLLECT NOTES

Fargo, N. D.—Steps to collect the close to half a million dollars in notes outstanding on stock sales were decided on by the board of directors of the Equity Co-operative Packing company which has been in session here. The members of the board believe that this money can be collected and ample funds be obtained with which to pay off all the indebtedness of the company, which now total less than $160,000.

More than $345,000 of these notes were renewed last fall and become due this fall. The makers of these notes are scattered over the entire state and some reside in other states. With a fair crop and reasonable prices this fall, the officers of the company believe that this can be accomplished without difficulty.

Working on New Plan.

While nothing was given out for publication, it was intimated that the board considered new plans for financing the company and secure the reopening of the big plant. The decision to collect the outstanding notes was made public by President C. W. Reichert.

"The deal that was ratified by the stockholders March 22, last, by which H. A. Emerson was to take over the plant by the payment of the indebtedness and an issue of new stock to the stockholders has fallen through because Mr. Emerson has failed to keep his part of the agreement," said Mr. Reichert. "Louis Altenbernd can get a sheriff's deed on the dwellings and the hotel belonging to the company on June 20, but that does not mean that he will do anything to injure the company. He is a heavy stockholder and is anxious to see the plant reopened and get on its feet as soon as possible."

Mr. Reichert stated that the board now has fairly good prospects for reopening the plant in a not distant future, provided plans are made to pay up the indebtedness. A Canadian company is negotiating for taking over the plant, and another concern is investigating, he said. "It is to be hoped that in the near future the board will be able to send out more cheerful news to the stockholders," said President Reichert.

Smallest State to Join S[illegible]

Geneva.—Situated between Switzerland and Austria is the little principality of Liechtenstein which enjoys an idyllic existence and is the smallest state in the world. With its 11,000 inhabitants this tiny territory and the little Austrian province of Vorarlberg have now entered into a customs union with the Swiss republic. Prior to the war Liechtenstein in spite of the strong antipathy of its people toward the Hapsburgs was united with the Austrian monarchy by union of customs, post, and currency.

Orin L. French Also Gained Fifteen Pounds Taking Tanlac.

"Tanlac built me up fifteen pounds and made my system a reservoir of new life and energy," was the characteristic statement of Orin L. French, prominent citizen of South St. Paul, Minn., residing at 925 Messer Ave.

"I suffered from indigestion, constipation, sleeplessness and a tired, run-down condition that made me so weak I could hardly move. I had throbbing headaches and dizzy spells when I would nearly fall down. I was also troubled with gas on my stomach and heartburn, rheumatic pains in my arms and legs, and altogether my burden of misery seemed to be all I could stand.

"One day I heard some men having a regular Tanlac talkfest and it was lucky for me, because what they said started me taking the medicine. Now I feel like a new man, sleep soundly, eat anything I want, and haven't an ache or a pain. Tanlac has won my undying gratitude."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

A 1923 Good Fairy.

One of Wichita's richest men saw a little girl, poorly dressed, standing at a display window of one of Wichita's leading cafes gazing wistfully at the good things to eat which were exhibited. The man's heart was touched. He approached her, touched her on the shoulder and asked her to tell him the circumstances of her parents. The little girl did and his heart was touched still further. The rich man pulled a package from his pocket, gave it to her and said: "Here, child, I have more than I want. Give this to your mother and tell her it will last her a year." The mother unwrapped the package with trembling hands after the girl came home. Inside the package lay a nice, new calendar.—Wichita Eagle.

Making His Task Easy

They were sitting in the twilight. "You're not weakening in your love for me, Harold?"

"No, indeed, darling," he responded earnestly. "Your love gives me the strength to move mountains."

"Oh, dearest," she responded, "it is only necessary for you to raise the dust."

Even for Small Boy

Little Neal was sitting at the breakfast table when his mother asked him how many pancakes he had eaten.

"Three," he answered.

"If you ate three more how many would that make?" questioned his mother as the little fellow is learning arithmetic.

"Well," replied Neal slowly, "I guess it would make a tummy full."

Like Most Women.

I shall never forget the agony of it. I was looking at ribbons in a department store. Like most women, I have a habit of putting my purse on the counter in front of me while examining merchandise. Not finding what I wanted, I picked up what I thought was my leather handbag and walked a few steps away when I became aware that my own bag was swinging on my arm. Fearfully I looked to see what it was that I had picked up, and, to my horror, discovered I had picked up another woman's purse.—Exchange.

The Northwest School says "Certain practices have proven universally successful in the control and eradication of sow thistle. Systematic and thorough cultivation thru the use of the bare fallow is a dependable means of eradication. Preventing seed-formation, early fall plowing followed by fallow until freeze-up; the use of early maturing crops; the use of inter-tilled crops and pasture are all successfully tried methods of control."

The Holt creamery shipped 105 tubs of butter last week, and they expect to ship about 113 tubs this week.

(Reprinted from last weeks paper)

One hundred and forty patrons delivered cream to the Holt creamery Monday, and they had to make four churnings again Tuesday.

The good dairy cow and the Holt creamery are both coming to the front.

For the first time since the Holt creamery was organized, they were obliged to churn four times Saturday, and made 48 tubs of butter.

The Holt creamery gives the farmer as good a deal as any creamery in this section of the state.

At one time Monday forenoon, between the hours of nine and ten, there were ten teams and autos waiting to unload their cream at the Holt creamery. One of the ten was an auto truck with several cans of cream.

The creamery is the life of the country, and the dairy cow never goes on a strike if she has plenty to eat. This country needs more good dairy cows and laying hens, but no more boarders.

Golden Wedding

About a hundred relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Sagstuen Sunday afternoon to help them celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

They were given $50.00 cash for a golden wedding present. A big dinner was served and Rev. Ordahl delivered the oration of the day.

Three sons, one daughter, ten grandchildren and Mrs. Sagstuen's mother Mrs. Agnet Lier aged 90 years, were all present.

Mr. Sagstuen was born in Norway in 1851 and married in that country on June 24th., 1873 to Karen Sagstuen and came to America in 1885.

They came to Marshall county in 1889 and homesteaded their place where they now live.

Mr. Sagstuen was postmaster and mail carrier for about 9 years before the village of Holt was started.

The aged couple have a host of friends who wish them many more wedding anniversaries.

The Crookston Trip.

The Farmers Tour to Crookston proved a success in spite of the bad weather conditions. Twelve autos with a capacity of 70 people made up the party. Rain was encountered before reaching Crookston, but the good roads permitted the party to continue to the Experiment Station. At the Station, coffee and cream was in waiting for the hungry party. In the afternoon, the party of 70 was divided into two groups, one group making an inspection of the crops and the stock, while the other group made an inspection of the gardens, buildings, the chicken farm and the dairy cows. Many interesting things were seen and the information gained from the men in charge of the Station was of great value to our farmers.

Those making the trip were: P. L. Anderson and family, Fred D. Voth and family, John Holst and family, Fred Steinhauer and family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Lund, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge, Paul Olson, E. S. Moe, Olaf Eide, Gilbert Sanoden and family, Ole Reierson, A. Bjerk, C. H. Gunhiem and family, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Nohre, P. H. Kiehne, John Simonson, Wm. Mehrkens, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Skoglund, Peter Appel, C. A. Davis, E. A. Silverness and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Swan, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Sandberg, Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Erickson, Joseph Jarland and family, Guy Anderson and family, Mrs Alfred Anderson and son, and Andrew L. Sagstuen.

The Elevator Meeting

The following officers were elected at the annual meeting of the Farmers elevator on Tuesday:

Louis Wegge, President; Albert Klungness, Vice Pres.; T. B. Folden Treasurer; M. O. Mattson, Secretary; P. N. Pederson, Chas. Skoglund and Bernhard Larson, Directors.

The company has enjoyed a good business the past year and have a very substantial gain in assetts.

Mr. Wright, a representative of the state machinery plant was present and gave a fine descriptive lecture of the state refformatory and its manufacturing plant.

All who attend the county fair next week can sign a petition for "The World Court", if they so desire.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Virginia—Forty North Dakota farmers will settle near Virginia, according to announcement by the chamber of commerce here.

Cook—A branch of the St. Louis County Poultry association was organized at a meeting here. Miss Cooke of the Farm Extension bureau, University farm, conducted the meeting.

Springfield—The congregation of St. Paul's Lutheran church of this city celebrated the laying of the corner stone of their new church. The church when completed will cost $80,000.

Thief River Falls—The annual convention of the American Legion for the territory comprising the northern half of the Ninth district was concluded in Thief River Falls at the legion club rooms.

Spring Valley—The annual meeting of the Minnesota Co-operative Creamery association, which comprises Houston, Fillmore, Winona and Mower counties was conducted on the fair grounds at Preston.

Virginia—The Old Settlers of 1893 association came into permanent being here when approximately 600 pioneer residents or their children gather for the first homecoming celebration here, and it was unanimously decided to make the homecoming annual.

Hutchinson—Five hundred business men of Minneapolis and Hutchinson were guests on a special train on the Electric Short line railway when a 30-mile extension from Hutchinson West to Lake Lillian was opened.

Ellendale—A community athletic and recreation field is being completed here through co-operation of the village council and the school. The field is to include a football field, base ball diamond and accommodations for track and field events, tennis and other sports.

Fairmont—Four hundred members of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way men employed on the Mason City and Sanborn division of the Chicago & North Western road, had their annual picnic at Interlachen park here.

Hayfield—The Dodge county old settlers association had its 47th annual meeting here. The program includes the annual business session in the morning, a picnic dinner at noon and a program of music and speaking in the afternoon.

Cook—With the completing and opening of state highway No. 11, between Cusson and Ray, there is a road direct from Duluth to the Canadian border. Traffic north is increasing daily.

Austin—Mr. and Mrs. E. Diddams of Le Roy celebrated their golden wedding by holding open house. Mr. and Mrs. Diddams were married in Cresco, Iowa, 50 years ago and have resided in Le Roy for more than 40 years. They have five children living.

Duluth—Two men were drowned, three were seriously hurt and considerable property was damaged when a wind traveling at 80 miles an hour, swept the city in the midst of a heavy rain storm, delaying street car traffic and disrupting telephone service.

Faribault—Faribault was the mecca for hundreds of city and village officials from all parts of the state when the annual convention of the League of Minnesota Municipalities opened for a two day session. More than 180 cities and villages have memberships in the league.

Alexandria—John Pearson, 78 years old, was drowned while swimming in Elbow lake near Park Rapids. Mr. Pierson had been a resident of Hubbard county for many years and had been warned by a physician that his heart was not in good condition. It is believed the ailment caused his death.

Worthington—The second district editorial association closed its summer meeting here. The program of the convention included a drive about the city, receptions to the women of the party by the Community club, land and water sports at Chautauqua park for the men, and a banquet by the city, Kiwanis club and commercial club.

Marshall—The practise of bringing foreign railroad cases into Minnesota for trial was given a hard blow by Judge A B. Gislason in the district court here when he refused to allow the case of Kopenzynski against the Northwestern Railway company to be tried in his court. All of the parties connected with the action reside in Milwaukee.

St. Charles—Work on St Charles' new $200,000 school building has progressed to the laying of the corner stone. The stone was put in place by C. E. Smith, president of the board of education. It contained a steel box in which were placed documents concerning the bond issue and contract letting for the school, copies of the St. Charles paper and a collection of small coins.

Wells—A business and professional women's club was organized here with a membership of 56. The club is affiliated with both the state and national federation.

Red Wing—Rev E G Wackernagel formerly of Toledo, was installed as pastor of St Paul's English Lutheran church of this city.

Sleepy Eye—Stafford King, state commander of the American Legion, speaking at an American Legion banquet here, urged concentrated effort in producing better hospitalization for former soldiers and an adjusted compensation.

New Ulm—The Brown county farm bureau picnic will be at Riverside park in Springfield, June 27.

Hibbing—Clyde Docher, 26, died from injuries received at the Morris mine near here when he was run over by an ore train. Docher was from Quirry, Minn.

Luverne—The 35th annual convention of the fifth district Minnesota Women's Christian Temperance union will be conducted in this city.

Clinton—The Big Stone district of the Swedish Lutheran church conducted its two days session here. Rev J. Martell of Wheaton is chairman. Several pastors from the district are present.

Kenyon—Alumni of the Minnesota State Agricultural school in Rice and Scott counties joined with alumni of Goodhue county in the annual reunion at the E. J. Starch farm, five miles from here.

Windom—The store of the Foss Mercantile company here was burglarized and about $2,000 worth of bolt silk and silk wearing apparel was taken.

Fairmont—Samuel Arthur Miller, nine year old son of Archie Miller of Triumph, was drowned in Twin lake while wading near the shore. Witneses say that the boy stepped into a hole and was drowned before help could reach him.

Moorhead—H. A. Johnson, who has been cashier of the Liberty State bank of Minneapolis, has been named by the board of directors as the new president of the First State bank of Moorhead. He succeeds M. T. Weum, who has retired because of ill health. Mr. Johnson will take over his new duties at once and will bring his family here.

Fairmont—The pea packing season began at the Fairmont cannery. All indications point to a bumper crop of peas this year. The early June variety, now being packed, is giving a better yield than ever before. Within a few days the plant will be employing more than 100 men, women and boys.

St. Cloud—For the first time since its organization in 1912, the Veterans Association of the Great Northern Railway will have its annual meeting in St. Cloud. A special train came from St. Paul, carried the delegates to the 13th annual convention, which had a two day session here.

Duluth—The 22d annual convention of the Finnish Baptist Mission Union of America opened here at the Ebenezer Baptist church here. Rev. Hugo Herrgard, Gladstone, Mich., who delivered the convention sermon, declared the outlook for the development of Swedish-Finnlanders in America was exceedingly bright.

Hanley Falls—Marcus Larson, aged 70, was killed while walking on the railroad tracks near Hazel Run. The man was seen walking down the tracks but the engineer believed he would step from between the rails and it was too late to stop when it was found that he did not hear or see the train.

Rochester—Some idea of the little interest and big expense involved in primary election is revealed in the announcement that it cost the city of Rochester nearly 50 cents for every vote cast. With less than 1,300 votes polled in the 13 precincts of the city and with the expense of conducting the pirmary here approximately $600, the high voting cost per capita is evident.

Fairmont—More than twelve thousand persons from over this entire district attended the annual summer picnic meeting of the Martin County Farm bureau. Among the speakers who addressed the picnickers were J. F. Reed, president Minnesota Farm Bureau federation, and Mrs. Ellsworth Richards, farm bureau organizer of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Granite Falls—Andrew J. Volstead, former congressman, is making plans for an extensive European tour accompanied by his daughter, Miss Laura Volstead. Leaving here early in August, Mr. Volstead will go to Denmark as a delegate to the anti-alcoholic convention there. Following the convention they will tour Europe, visiting the Scandinavian countries and also spending some time in southern Europe before their return.

Waseca—Three filings already have been made for the office of mayor, declared vacant recently by Judge Dean of Fairmont because of violation of the corrupt practises act. Dr. F. A. Swartwood filed. George Goodspeed, winning candidate of the election which was declared illegal, was next. The third to file was W. A. Johnston, president of the council and acting mayor.

Duluth—Six Duluth attorneys are being urged for the district judge vacancy to be caused by the resignation of Judge W. A. Cant who was advanced to the federal district bench by President Harding. Those whose names are mentioned in connection with the appointment are: Mason M. Forbes, Warren E. Green, Victor Stearns, J. J. Robinson, Spencer J. Searles and Hans B. Haraldson. Governor Preus had announced the appointment of Harry G. Gearhart of Duluth, as the successor but Mr. Gearhart declined the appointment.

Hibbing—A verdict of $6,000 was allowed John McDonald, former grade crossing watchman, in his suit against the Great Northern railroad for injuries received when a train struck him.

Good Thunder—Plans have been completed for the 17th annual tournament of the South Minnesota Firemen's Tournament association here. A program of sports and free street vaudeville has been arranged, including two baseball games, with the New Richland, Janesville and Amboy clubs as contestants.

MANY DIE IN SUNDAY STORM

Six Lose Lives, Several Hurt in Bowman and Adams Counties. N. Dakota.

HOMES ARE WRECKED

Country Through Which Storm Traveled Was Sparsely Settled—Many Cattle Killed and Farm Buildings Razed.

Hettinger, N. D.—Six killed, one so badly injured that he is expected to die, eleven seriously injured, and at least five slightly injured, is the toll of the wind storm which Sunday evening swept this vicinity.

The storm struck three and one-half miles south of Reeder about 8:15. Eye witnesses in Reeder say the storm seemed to stand still, evidently taking a north and south direction.

The track of the storm was through a sparsely settled country, extending three miles long and one-half mile wide. Many declare it a miracle that more did not die, considering the fury of the storm. The scant population, however, in the path of the storm is cited as the main reason for so few deaths. The dead are:

W. B. Lambert, wife, and daughter, aged 5.

Olaf Lundahl, 2½ miles north of Bucyrus.

George D. Lewis, and wife.

The seriously injured were:

H. F. Danforth.

The nine-year-old son of Mr. Danforth, broken hip and serious scalp wounds.

Mrs. Frank Gotchey, a widow, with four sons, aged 8, 11, 14, and 24.

Marshall Lambert.

Herbert Spencer, struck on head by falling windmill, expected to die.

Mrs. Herbert Spencer.

Reva Lewis, 21, and her brother, Ralph, aged 14.

The slightly injured: V. I. Carlson, Mrs. Olaf Lundahl, C. C. Rourke, Vera Lewis, and son of Andrew Kingsvatter.

Many Cattle Killed.

Over one hundred head of cattle and horses are reported to have been killed by the storm.

Scores of buildings were hit, some laid flat to the earth, and others not so badly wrecked.

No warning of the impending danger was given as the rapidly gathering clouds bore close resemblance to rain clouds.

Telephone and telegraph communications are out between Scranton and Hettinger.

Property loss is reported to be about $150,000.

BRITISH KICK ON TREATMENT

Charge Unfair Treatment of Subjects at Ellis Island Camp.

London.—Andrew W. Mellon American secretary of the treasury, will probably be consulted by British officials upon his arrival here with regard to alleged indignities forced upon British subjects landing at Ellis Island, the house of commons was informed by Ronald McNeill, under secretary for foreign affairs.

The subject was brought up by Captain Viscount Curzon, member for the south division of Battersea, who called attention to the case of an unnamed English mercantile captain who, he said, was made to land at Ellis Island on April 27, last, placed in a wire cage with thirty foreigners, and afterwards forced to strip for examination, although he had been told by the American consul that there would be no difficulty.

EIGHT KILLED IN "L" WRECK

New York.—Eight persons were killed and 83 injured when two wooden cars plunged from a Brooklyn electric structure into the borough's busiest traffic intersection.

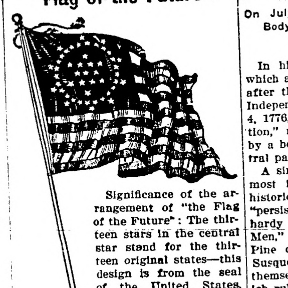
The two-car train, well filled with an early afternoon crowd of women, children, and a few men, jumped the rails, ripped through rotted guard beams, tottered on the edge of the structure while hundreds of passersby stood spellbound in terror, and pancaked on its side to the pavement, a mass of splintered debris.

Carrying with it a mesh of electric trolley wires, the train hurtled to the pavement amid spurts of blue flames and crackling wires. As screams of the pinioned passengers, many of them transfixed by jagged sections of broken wood, rose above the crash, flames shot from underneath the cars and drove back pedestrians who ran to the scene.

Ships to Go Home Dry

New York.—Eight great foreign liners which sailed into New York harbor during the week end with their return supply of liquor under government seals are preparing to put out for home with closed bars. The supplies of two of those ships, the Baltic and the Berengaria, had been seized by United States customs officials. The others will lose their drinkables as soon as seizure can be made. Thousands of gallons of liquor, wines, and beers already have been confiscated.

"Flag of the Future"



Significance of the arrangement of "the Flag of the Future": The thirteen stars in the central star stand for the thirteen original states—this design is from the seal of the United States, adopted in 1782; the twenty-five stars in circle, enlarged from Washington's design in 1776, represent the states added during the first century; while the ten stars in the loose outer circle represent states admitted since 1876. New stars to be inserted in this circle at equal intervals.

NOT THE FIRST FEDERATION

Organization of the Thirteen Colonies Had Been Preceded by an Organization in 1643.

Many persons have the notion that the first federation of the early American colonies was that of the 13 colonies, but the first real federation was effected May 19, 1643, when the colonies of Massachusetts Bay, Plymouth, Connecticut and New Haven entered into a compact for common defense. At this time there were 20,000 English settlers in the country, divided into six colonies. As the settlements spread along the coast toward contact with one another and began to extend back into the interior, it was seen that some common organization was needed to meet questions which were bound to arise from these extensions.

The movement for a federation began in Hartford and New Haven. The Massachusetts colonies were indifferent at first. Rhode Island and the Providence plantations held aloof, as did those settlers which were in what is now the territory of the state of Maine. These last-mentioned settlements were composed largely of people who had left the original colonies because of religious disputes, to seek larger religious liberty. It was through this federation of Plymouth, Massachusetts Bay, Connecticut and New Haven colonies that the New Englanders were able to reduce the Narragansett Indians to terms of peace, to check the aggressiveness of the Dutch in the neighborhood of Wethersfield and Hartford, and effectually to remonstrate with the Swedish colonies along the Delaware. Twenty years later a new federation was formed on a more liberal basis.

Declaration Endangered.

The originals of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are deposited in this ordinary safe of thin steel, proof neither against fire nor water, which stands in the library of the State department, Washington, surrounded with combustible material. A request for $20,000 to provide a fireproof vault has been omitted from the appropriation bill. This request is made and ignored every year. It is stated that this safe would not stand a severe fire over 20 minutes.

Patriotic Sons of Liberty.

The Sons of Liberty, which is said to have been organized on October 31, 1765, in a small room in a distillery in Harvard square, Boston, was the most famous of the patriotic secret societies named in American history. The Sons of Liberty had a prime purpose, which was to oppose in every possible way the obnoxious Stamp act.

The organizers were mostly young men, fiery and adventurous. Paul Revere was one of them, and later, when the Revolution began, was chosen their leader. It is believed that the pretended Indians who threw the tea into Boston harbor were picked members of the society.

March of Democracy.

When Jefferson wrote "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," he flung the challenge of new-born democracy into a world of oligarchy and despotism. If one wants the measure of Jefferson's vision, he needs only consider the political changes that have taken place in the last 146 years.

DECLARATIONS OF SAME DATE

On July 4, 1776, Another Patriotic Body Resolved They Should Be Free and Independent.

In histories of the United States which are particularly exact one finds, after the story of the Declaration of Independence at Philadelphia on July 4, 1776, mention of another "Declaration," made that same day and year by a body of frontiersmen in the central part of Pennsylvania.

A single paragraph disposes of this most interesting and remarkable of historic coincidences. One reads of a "persistent legend" that a group of hardy pioneers, known as "Fair Play Men," gathered on July 4, 1776, near Pine creek, on the West branch of Susquehanna river, and declared themselves free thereafter from British rule.

That is all that the most diligent search in histories brings out, for the proofs of the story, as well as its details, were believed until recently to have been lost in the mists of the past.

Henry W. Shoemaker, a newspaper man of Altoona, a descendant of some of the signers of this Pine creek "Declaration," spent ten years in collecting the legends and stories of early life in Pennsylvania.

He was particularly interested in the story of the "Declaration" and interviewed many old people in the central part of the state whose ancestors were among the early settlers.

With the help of some of the old pioneers he brought the legend, with its many variations, to a point where he believes that its authenticity, and many if not all of its details, are well established.

The scene of the Pine Creek "Declaration" is, according to Mr. Shoemaker's researches, near Pine station, Clinton county, about 19 miles above the flourishing city of Williamsport.

Knights to Knight

(The Knights of Columbus have recently presented a statue of Lafayette to Metz.)

Out from Metz on a bright June day
Came the Marquis de Lafayette.

Tomb of Lafayette in the Cemetery at Picpus.

The chimes rang out and the town was gay,
Bold in his youth he rode away,
Away to the West, and there he met—
Soldiers of France, brave Jouquerin,
Pelletier and his gallant crew,
Every one a fighting man—
Every one a man who knew
That life is brief and love is long
And liberty's all of a freeman's song.

Out to the struggling West he came,
Noble Marquis of Lafayette!
Out to the West he brought the flame,
The flame of France. His magic name
Caught men's hearts in its magic net.
The flame of France to a darkened land,
On and on in the struggle it went;
The flame of France to a stumbling band,
Ragged and worn and all but spent.
It gave new zeal to the freemen's fight
Till the whole world shone in its glorious light.

Back to Metz from the wondrous West,
Hail to the Marquis of Lafayette!
Back with bays from a chivalrous quest—
Write his name with the nation's best,
The names Columbia can't forget.
In the heart of Metz, there let him stand—
In America's heart his niche is made—
Facing the West, his sword in hand—
Glorious, young and unafraid!
Knight of France in a hundred fights,
Take this tribute from New World Knights.
—John B. Kennedy, in New York Times.

When Washington Prayed.

New Jersey was a camp and a battlefield during the greater part of the Revolutionary war, and the inhabitants learned to know Washington and his men.

Traditions of Washington are treasured and handed down in many families, whose ancestors had homes about Morristown when Washington was encamped there and living in the Ford mansion, now "Washington's headquarters." Washington's prayer in the woods of the Short hills at a dark and critical period of American history is one of these local traditions, says the Detroit News.

Lafayette Writing Intact.

The original manuscript of the response of the Marquis de Lafayette at the reception accorded him by the national house of representatives December 10, 1824, has been presented to Lafayette college by Morris L. Clothier of Philadelphia. The manuscript is written in Lafayette's own hand.

Fletcher's Castoria has been in use for over 30 years to relieve babies and children of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and, by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving natural sleep without opiates.

The genuine bears signature of Chas H. Fletcher.

Must Be a Terror.

Delbert D. Wilmeth, judge of the city court, has received an anonymous letter asking him to deal harshly with a colored man who was arrested a few days ago on charges of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. The letter, in part, is as follows:

"We hope you will see fit to give ——— at least 1,000 days, for he sure is the terror of his street. He has no respect for ladies or children. He don't work, just lays around, runs a game at his home, sells 'mule,' gets drunk, puts wife out of house in her night clothes, uses all kinds of language, carries gun, snatches pocketbooks and holds up. The whole street belongs to him when he runs amuck playing bad."—Indianapolis News.

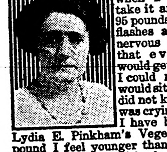
CHANGE OF LIFE LOSES TERRORS

For Women Who Rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Greenville, Pa.—"I took your medicine through the Change of Life and it did wonders for me. I was down in bed when I started to take it and weighed 95 pounds. I had hot flashes and was so nervous and weak that everything would get black and I could not see. I would sit and cry and did not know what I was crying for. Since I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel younger than I did ten years ago, and my friends all tell me I look younger, and I owe it all to the Vegetable Compound. I do all my housework for a family of seven now. I will be glad to answer any woman who writes me in regard to my case."—Mrs. JOHN MYERS, 55 Union St., Greenville, Pa.

Many letters similar to this have been published testifying to the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. They are sincere expressions from women who describe as best they can their feelings before and after taking this well-known medicine.

Many times they state in their letters their willingness to answer women who write them. It is an offer dictated by gratitude and a desire to help others.

Not What He Was After.

Responding to the call of gentle spring, Hoffy secured some approved fishing apparatus and went out to the lake front. There he proceeded to make casts. A long one brought in a rusty sardine tin, which was successfully landed. Another adroit cast hooked a dented salmon can.

The disciple of Izaak Walton then started to wind up.

"Don't weaken, Hoffy," urged a passing friend. "You'll land fish in a minute."

Hoffy kept on winding up.

"I prefer to seek another spot," he announced with dignity. "I am not after canned fish."

Both in the Swim.

"My daughter sprang from a line of peers," said the proud father.

"Well," said the suitor, "I once jumped off a dock myself."—Everybody's Magazine.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By Charles Tenney Jackson

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"THE CAPTAIN JEAN!"

SYNOPSIS—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an old-time friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile.

The stranger's face was all but averted. The profile gave the impression of utter obliviousness to the crowded room. His English smallclothes were rather passe for the period; and the powdered hair above a coat of blue broadcloth, his buff breeches, and silk stockings thrust into low silver-buckled shoes gave a quaint distinction to his tall figure. The two young men watched his bronzed hand turning a card under the ruby light. After a moment Jarvis yawned audibly; and then a nudge came between him and the Count de Almonaster. They looked down upon the short, stout form of Dominique, the alderman. Behind him peered Beluche, the restless seaman of Cartagena.

The artist strolled again to the barroom. Not even the buzz of interest that followed a violent exclamation in the cardroom lured him again from his cognac. But Dominique, the alderman, had started to his tiptoes with a curious glance at his fellow-buccaneer. "A voice?" he whispered, and stared past the onlookers.

The British officer, flushed with drink and chagrin, had leaned closer to his opponent. "Do you question my word, sir, as to the worth of the wench? Put her upon the block at the Rotunda tomorrow! She would fetch three thousand dollars at Charleston; and in this town, sir, if you will find a fairer one—slave, or free woman of color—or even among its reputed beauties—"

There was a stir; the Creole gentlemen glanced at one another darkling. Langhorne, the consul, raised his hand, but Sazarac had answered slowly:

"Your pardon, sir. I did not know the—the—she was a chattel. I own no slaves, sir, nor do I care to wager for one."

"You shall play on, sir. You have ruined my fortunes on this river voyage, and in last night's play! I demand my chance at retrieving. You have just accepted my two horses in pledge. Now, then—this San Domingo girl, upon the card, sir?"

Sazarac gathered the long rough surtout about his shoulders as if to arise. The consul whispered to the red-faced Carr. The dealer sat back with a glance at the circle of faces.

"You cannot leave!" Carr cried hoarsely. He turned to those behind him: "Gentlemen! Is it customary, in New Orleans, for a loser to be refused any legitimate wager that may reinstate him?"

There was a murmur; it was the code at Maspero's. The stranger must know. De Marigny whispered: "He has Sazarac there. The stranger must play!"

The stranger glanced about. Carr struck the table violently.

"It is my privilege, gentlemen! A card, sir! The turn of one card, instead of running the deal! No chance, then, for trickery!"

The stillness became acute. It was a bad word at Maspero's. De Marigny expected the next instant to see the unknown gamester fling his glove into Carr's face. But the quiet profile did not change. Langhorne clucked in his throat as if the situation were intolerable—as if, indeed, more portentous things than a slave girl hung on the turn of the card.

"The card, then—" Sazarac went on slowly. "Three thousand dollars on the red against the bond girl."

"Taken—" Carr bowed. "The black will turn, gentlemen!"

The dealer threw the cards in a semicircle across the cloth. Deliberately, but with a flash of his white fingers, he picked one at random and turned it up.

It was the ace of hearts.

The groups watched it curiously. Captain Sazarac arose, threw his cloak higher about his face, although the day was warm, and turned to go. The dealer, at a gesture from him, swept the notes and gold upon the cloth, into a leather bag. The groups broke up with a comment here and there; the gentlemen by the door gave away to the stranger as he advanced.

Colonel Carr had started sullenly at this abrupt dismissal by his victorious opponent. Whatever wild word was upon the ruined man's lips was checked by the consul's muttered warning. But Carr, too, arose, following a pace to growl over the crowd at the door.

"The girl, sir, will be at your disposal at the hotel at whatever hour you claim your property!"

The stranger bowed. Out in the drinking-room he seemed like one conscious that the eyes of all New Orleans' men of affairs were upon him. Just outside the door he stopped abruptly. In the shadow of the arched courtway of St. Louis street two squat, short figures, their heads together, their arms gesticulating wildly, were vainly trying each to quiet the other.

"You know it is!" gasped the worthy alderman, holding his side. "By the Lord!—I am not fooled—no, no! Shaven as a priest, his hair whited as an English squire's—muffled by stock and peruke—no, nothing deceives these old eyes of mine!"

"Thou d—d fool—silence!" whispered the swarthy admiral of Cartagena. "Is there not still a price upon his head—an added price since he renounced the President's pardon, and involved himself in that affair of Galveston island? Spanish, English—the Americans, too—they would hound him to the gallows!"

The tall cloaked figure was passing. Twenty paces away, the entrance to La Bourse de la Maspero was filled with watching burghers.

And from them all a young man had advanced smilingly. In his full-skirted green coat and shining white breeches held within his polished Hessian boots, the young Count de Almonaster bowed gracefully and extended a hand all but hidden by his beruffled cuff.

"At the green room of Maspero's, sir, none play save those to whom New Orleans extends its hospitality. If, perchance, at any time, the name of a gentleman could serve in a possible affair, I am the grandson of Don Almonaster y Roxas."

"I thank you, Monsieur." The stranger extended his own. "I am Captain Gaspar Sazarac, recently on service with the United States explorations in the West." He shrugged smilingly: "I thank you, Monsieur."

He turned and met again two elderly men who stared unbelievingly. Then the gold-laced admiral of Cartagena placed hand upon his shoulder. "Behold us!" he whispered. "I—Beluche—and this, old Dominique! Dogs of old days and green seas! And you—the Captain Jean!"

The stranger gazed at them questionly. "It may be," he mused, "that after the heat is done, I shall take the air upon the levee by the old Fort St. Louis. The gentry do not promenade just there, I believe."

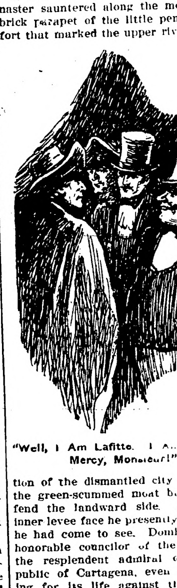
Before the eyes of the watching burghers at the coffee house he sauntered down the cobbles of the rue Chartres. The fat and honest alderman muttered; and then, at a laugh from the young count, he turned to stare fiercely at him.

"I shall take the air upon the levee myself, sirs," smiled Raoul. "Ho, Dominique! Do not fail your captain!"

CHAPTER II

A Ship for a Pirate's Eye.

It was dusk when Raoul de Almonaster sauntered along the moldering brick parapet of the little pentagonal fort that marked the upper river junction of the dismantled city [illegible] the green-scummed moat built to defend the landward side. Along the inner levee face he presently saw what he had come to see. Dominique, the honorable councilor of the city, and the resplendent admiral of the republic of Cartagena, even now fighting for its life against the king o' Spain's men across the Caribbean sea.



"Well, I Am Lafitte. I Am at Your Mercy, Monsieur!"

The small carronade which marked the hour of retreat—eight o'clock—barked at the city hall. At once, slaves and children, soldiers and sailors, must be off the streets of the Vieux Carre. The lazy boom of a warship down the crescent bend of the Mississippi answered; and, following the sound idly, the count's eye noted, before the plaza, a long, black, rakish clipper with shining yellow masts, new sails glistening as they hung to dry, and untenanted decks, sweet and clean as a ballroom floor.

"A beauty, that Seraphine!" he mused. "The latest Yankee, out from Boston cannot match her. Ho, Beluche! She must make old blood stir in you two adventurers! Aye, turn your envious eyes aside!"

He started at a step on the levee. The gamester of the Bourse de la Maspero had come along the dismantled rampart of the fort. Sazarac bowed with a recognizing smile. The bronzed cheeks looked even darker below the whited wig; his eyes had the level, thoughtful humor of the man who laughs behind unreadable reserve.

"You may well say, Monsieur de Almonaster. I have not seen in years a hull so cleanly lined."

De Almonaster glanced at the hand upon the silver sword hilt. The two rotund respectables had seen the tall man in buff and broadcloth, and were hastening. "I see, Monsieur," retorted he, "that, despite your services with the American explorations in the West, you know a ship?"

"I have seen the sea, Monsieur." Sazarac bowed with a searching glance at the younger man. "And you—an eye for a ship is an eye for a woman. . . . I did not expect to meet the Count de Almonaster so far from the fashionable promenade?"

"Nor I to find Captain Lafitte so near again to the Place d'Armes!"

Sazarac studied him gravely. "Your pardon, sir! I think—"

Raoul snapped his fingers laughingly at old Dominique puffing up the levee. Admiral Beluche had drawn a cutlass in fervent salute to his captain.

"Come—come, gentlemen!" Sazarac's voice raised sharply.

"Thou—Jean!" whispered Dominique in the Acadian patois of the coast.

"Lafitte of Barataria. Come, you—sir! Did you think you could tread these streets and not be recognized?" murmured De Almonaster.

The two old adventurers crowded around the stranger. "Now, I am a man again," chuckled Dominique. "And not a clerk drooling over city affairs!" And suddenly, with an affectionate gesture, he lifted slightly the whited peruke above Sazarac's ear. Raven black the hair, tinged with gray. "The beard shaven," droned on old Dominique. "The cutlass scar concealed which you got from the Spaniard at Trinidad! And these arms caught you as you fell!"

"And this cut the fellow down!" cried Beluche. "Jean, cease this fooling!"

The Captain Sazarac was laughing in turn. His old lieutenants seized his hands, stroked his sleeve, crying out brokenly. Sazarac glanced keenly at young Almonaster.

"No fear," mumbled the alderman. "I have heard this young gallant say but yesterday that he would draw sword in any affair if Lafitte was to command!"

"Aye, for the emperor!" growled Beluche. "The clipper, Jean! Did you ever see a finer? Monsieur Girod brought her from Charleston new from the ways! The finest teak—lacquer tables, tapestries smuggled from Bilboa! All for the fallen emperor! Perhaps you have heard, my captain?"

"We were saying who so worthy to command as Captain Lafitte?" fumed old Dominique, eager as a boy, "did we not, young sir?"

Sazarac smiled. Raoul interposed: "The plot! Ah, yes . . . the plot!"

"They have built a mansion for him in the rue Chartres—" protested Dominique. "Financed the ship—not a first family in all Louisiana that will not have at least a midshipman aboard! But old Bossiere to command—bah! I would balk at it if I had a skin to risk!"

"You might well with the English ring of ships around St. Helena," said Sazarac gravely. "Well, I am Lafitte. I am at your mercy, Monsieur!"

The restless eyes of Beluche were upon a trio of officers from the American garrison who came slowly along the promenade. "Too much talk!" he muttered. "Since that old affair of yours, Jean, the seizure of Galveston island, despite the President's pardon, you have long been proscribed. As to this emperor—the devil with him! The Seraphine—look at her now! Is she a toy for the dandies of this town to play with? A ship—Jean, and a good ship?"

"Eh?" put in Alderman Dominique; "Robber, what's in your mind?"

"The American officers—" retorted the admiral. "Let us be on."

"The Yankees—" murmured Sazarac, throwing his silken neck scarf higher as the meeting groups saluted courteously. "When will Louisiana be done with this idea that she is a principality aloof from the Washington government? The Yankees, gentlemen, are here taking your little Paris."

"They might better have left their manners in the Kentucky woods," said De Almonaster. "And cease meddling in the affairs of Spain across the Sabine. You, yourself, sir, what is the feeling in the West?"

Sazarac stopped to look over the darkening river. "It is a far cry to Washington. In the Ohios there is gossip. A new republic to be carved from the wilderness, the Spanish provinces to be seized; and among the discontented spirits are the exiled Tories from the Canadas and the agents of His British Majesty ever watching with jealous eyes. You saw, sir, the affair of yesterday at Maspero's?"

"Colonel Carr, who came with you down-river? I cannot make his mission out as I might wish."

"Nor I. Now and then on the packet, he boasted of curious things. I recall, one night, a lady warned him to silence!"

"The lady?" De Almonaster smiled.

"Tonight I shall claim my wager from Colonel Carr."

MRS. CONKLIN 70 BUT SHE VOTES

Almost As Active As Schoolgirl Since Taking Tanlac, Declares Minneapolis Woman.

"Since taking Tanlac I am as happy and almost as active as when I was a schoolgirl, despite my seventy years," said Mrs. Ocy Conklin, a highly respected resident of 20 Royalston Ave., N., Minneapolis, Minn., recently.

"Why, I even went to the polls and stood in line waiting to cast my vote and didn't feel tired. That shows how active I am.

"But before taking Tanlac there were times when I was too weak and nervous to even do any sewing. Indigestion bothered me terribly, my back and head ached badly and I was too nervous to sleep right.

"At first I didn't take much stock in Tanlac, but now I'm convinced there is nothing like it. I don't know what it is to have indigestion, headaches or nervousness, and I help with the housework and do lots of other tasks without feeling tired. Tanlac is simply grand."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

New Use for German Castles.

The castles of Cassel, which originated in the time of landgraves, have been turned to new uses. The residence castle has been occupied by a picture gallery; a German tapestry museum is to be opened there shortly. It is rumored that the famous castle Wilhelmshohe, in which Napoleon III lived as a prisoner, is to be converted into a hotel. One of the most beautiful castles of central Germany is the Orange castle in the Karlssuel, which somewhat resembles the Sansouci of Potsdam. The government in Cassel uses it for exhibition purposes.

COULDN'T KEEP ON THE PATH

Fiddler Might "Speed the Plow" a While, but Admitted He Was Sure to Wander.

A certain old chap, who plays the fiddle at country dances, is "great on time," but unless he is argued with he will play "The Girl I Left Behind Me," from eight o'clock till twelve for every dance except the Virginia reel.

Some of the old dancers were on the floor and between dances one of them went up to the fiddler, who sat rubbing resin on his bow.

"Uncle," said the dancer, "all the folks on the floor want you to play old 'Speed the Plow' for the next dance. Can't you give it to them?"

The old man tucked his resin into his vest pocket.

"I should like to 'commodate ye fust rate," he said, "but there's suthin' sing'lar 'bout the tune of 'Speed the Plow.' Jest as soon as I 'Speed the Plow' 'long a little ways I run right into 'The Girl I Left Behind Me.'"—Los Angeles Times.

Labor —that's the Big Cost in Painting

LABOR accounts for about three-quarters of the entire cost of a painting job. Materials cost only about one-quarter—so the possible saving in cost between the best and the cheaper materials is not worth consideration.

And by specifying the best paint, and getting years of extra wear, you save the big labor cost of frequent re-painting. You get the most economical job in the end.

Minnesota Needs Representation

The Republican Party is in control of the government of the United States—certainly for two years more, probably for a much longer time.

Minnesota must be represented in the councils of the dominant party in the U. S. Senate. We must not step out of the position of influence we have so long held in the nation.

The Republican Party took over the government at a time when there were five million unemployed in the United States. Now industry is busy everywhere and there are half a million jobs in excess of the supply of workers.

The war debt has been reduced by several billion dollars, government expenses reduced and taxes re-adjusted so as to interfere as little as possible with those activities by which the people make their living.

We recognize the fact that the farmers of Minnesota are not getting their share of the general prosperity. Labor and the industries are organized along economic lines and are able to name the price of their products within reasonable limits. The farmers take the price offered for what they sell and pay the price asked for what they buy. Gov. Preus was among the first to advocate organization for agriculture. He stands for co-operative marketing as the best and only means for bringing general prosperity to the farmers. The Republican party stands squarely behind him on that proposition, and Congress and the Legislature have already passed laws to clear the way and assist the farmers to organize. Well paid labor and profitable agriculture is necessary to keep the nation permanently prosperous.

The Republican Party invites you to come out on July 16th and vote for J. A. O. Preus for U. S. Senator. He is an able man. He is a clean man. He has the welfare of the people at heart. The son of a minister—which means comparative poverty and a mind trained from infancy to helpfulness to the people he worked his way through the schools largely by his own efforts, and as a young man has become governor of Minnesota. You will make no mistake in voting for him.

Yours respectfully,

REPUBLICAN VOLUNTARY COMMITTEE

Chas. R. Adams, Chr.

Action is expected to result in more regular employment and in a stabilization of production.

Washington—Commissioner General of Immigration Husband recommends requiring steamship companies to provide quarters for immigrants detained at Ellis Island and other United States immigration stations. Accommodations provided will then be responsibility of steamship companies, which can meet requirements of each country for its nationals. The United States is the only country now bearing this expense. Suggestion made in answer to complaints of British officials of treatment of British subjects at Ellis Island.

Domestic

Washington—A turtle left in the Tonga islands by Captain James Cook, the English mariner, in 1773, was found there last month by Captain E. T. Pollock, governor of American Samoa.

Denver—Funeral services for Thomas French and Thomas F. Dawson, both of Denver, victims of an automobile accident in Bear Creek canyon, were held here. President Harding sent a floral offering to each.

Stevenson, Wash.—"This will break mother's heart," Joseph Hillzer, 10, cried when a dynamite cap with which he was playing exploded, blowing three fingers off of one hand. The child attempted to wrap a handkerchief around the bleeding stumps but failing to stop the flow of blood, rushed to his home. Playmates followed and found Joseph lying on the floor dead. He had committed suicide by sending a bullet into his heart.

Boston—Telephone operators went on strike in all the New England states except Connecticut. The strike was called by one union for shorter hours and higher wages. Members of a rival union remained at work. Members of the rival unions, emerging from mass meetings in Boston, threatened to clash physically. Extra details of police kept 3,000 girls on the move.

Madison, Wis. — The assembly served notice on the Senate that unless it provides for financing the University of Wisconsin and the nine Wisconsin normal schools by income taxes, it will kill appropriation bills for these institutions.

Harrisburg—A brood of 17 year locusts—the brood which has appeared at regular intervals in this country since 1634 when the Pilgrims discovered the insects in Massachusetts, is making its appearance in Pennsylvania this spring. They are present already in four counties, and are expected in 19 more.

OPEN DRIVE ON BARBERRY PLANT

34 Men Under the Direction of George C. Mayoue Will Attempt to Eradicate Root.

MAKING A RE-SURVEY

Statewide Campaign Is Instituted to Reduce Rust Hazard in North Dakota Wheat Fields—Men Divided Into Teams.

Fargo, N. D.—Thirty-four men have left Fargo to open the barberry eradication campaign for the summer, aimed at locating specimens of barberry bushes which harbor the destructive black stem wheat rust. The men, many of them students at the North Dakota Agricultural college, are under the direction of George C. Mayoue, state leader.

The men are divided into six squads that will be occupied in a resurvey of the Red river valley counties which have been surveyed in previous summers. Following the resurvey, which is expected to take three weeks, the squads will leave for the western part of the state, where the tier of 16 western counties of the state will be covered by an original survey. When the squads complete their work this fall, the entire state will have been covered by the surveys.

Mayoue to Minot.

Mr. Mayoue has left for Minot. Harper Brush, assistant leader, accompanied Mr. Mayoue to Minot, where he will begin a series of barberry and wheat rust demonstrations at fairs throughout the state. E. Verle Deach, who will spend part of his time with newspapers of the state during the campaign, left for Cando to open a series of fair demonstrations.

John C. Stewart and Percy Flem constitute the first squad of state men who left for the Pembina county district.

The second squad which left for Grafton consists of Seth A. Welch, Richard Cripe, Clarence Jensen, Fred Wilkinson, Vernon Trowbridge, and Oscar Hansen.

Another squad which will cover the Grand Forks area is made up of Hilman Kjorlie, Ben Rumpeltes, Francis Trumbull, Christian Benson, Leonard Severson, and Cyril Arnold.

The Wahpeton district will be covered by Ronald Bentley, Franklin Roberts, Philip Boise, Herbert Herbison, Fred S. Willson, Carl Baden, Verne Archer, and Robert Carlson.

A determined effort will be made by the six groups to locate all of the remaining barberry bushes in the state. Bushes that are found are dug out by the roots, although common salt and sodium arsenite will also be used to destroy the pests. The use of chemicals have been found to be necessary to supplement the work of digging the bushes.

SLAYS SHERIFF TO ESCAPE

Murderer Believed to Be Hiding in Fargo or Moorhead.

Fargo, N. D.—Edwin Rust, murderer of Sheriff Fulker, is believed to be fleeing from a posse at Little Falls, Minn., after a gunfight in the railroad yards there, according to advices received by Sheriff Pete Malvey of Clay county.

Authorities at Little Falls, he said, discovered a man riding on top of a train there and when hailed he took a shot at them. The officers returned the shot and the man took to the woods. He is being sought there. The man is believed to have been wounded.

Although no arrests were made there, Sheriff Malvey declared the reports "sound very good."

Sheriff Malvey returned to Moorhead after more than 24 hours spent in scouring the countryside for traces of Rust. Several reports were investigated but no traces of the man found.

Edwin Rust, 20, wanted by authorities in several cities, Sunday night at 10 o'clock shot and killed Sheriff I. C. Fulker of Aberdeen, S. D., as the two were preparing to retire in a berth on Great Northern tain No. 10, at a point about four miles south of Moorhead.

More than 24 hours of search by several posses in North Dakota and Minnesota had failed to bring any clue of the murderer. Authorities are now inclining to the belief that the fugitive is in hiding either in Fargo or Moorhead.

Detectives in Hunt.

Local detectives are making a thorough search in both cities and if he is here it is confidently expected that he will be apprehended within a short time.

Twister Visits Deadwood, S. D.

Deadwood, S. D.—A cyclone, which uprooted trees two feet in diameter and threw telephone poles across the street, struck Deadwood and vicinity Monday night, causing thousands of dollars damage to property and crops. No one was injured, as far as could be learned. The twister came down the gulch into Deadwood, turned, and then went back up. There was a heavy fall of rain and huge hail stones at the same time which broke many windows and street lights and flooded some store buildings.

BLACK RUST IS FOUND IN VALLEY

A. C. Field Slightly Affected and Reports Are Coming In From Other Sections.

CASES ARE ISOLATED

Reports From Neighboring Counties Show That Rust Got Late Start This Year—Little Damage Is Anticipated.

Fargo, N. D.—First reports of black stem rust on the wheat in the Red River valley were issued at the North Dakota Agricultural college. The rust was found on experiment plots of wheat being maintained at the college.

Samples of wheat infected with black rust have also been brought to Wahpeton in Richland county from near Christine. A sample was also said to have been found near Moorhead.

Experts at the college said that rust was making its appearance later this year than usual. It was also stated that the weather conditions now are favorable to the wheat and against the rapid spread of rust.

The wheat crop was reported as well advanced in North Dakota, and the fact that rust made it appearance so late was held as cause for optimism. It was admitted, however, that great damage is possible should weather conditions become favorable to the spreading of the rust.

Less Than Usual.

St. Paul.—There is considerably less black stem rust in Minnesota at this time than in several years past, according to E. C. Stackman, plant pathologist at the university agricultural farm. It is possible, Mr. Stackman said, to find a trace of rust in many fields, but at no place has it done damage, and on the whole the situation is much better than normal.

None at Grand Forks.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Inquiries here brought forth no reports of rust in the northeastern section of North Dakota. Present cool weather and previous warmth and dryness have not been favorable for the development of rust, according to J. G. Diamond, state statistician for the bureau of agricultural economics.

BUDGET SHOWS BIG SURPLUS

Found to Be $110,000,000 More Than Was Expected.

Washington.—The federal government closed its books for the fiscal year, 1923, with a surplus of approximately $310,000,000, it was announced at the office of Brigadier General H. M. Lord, director of the budget bureau.

This is $110,000,000 in excess of the estimate of surplus made by President Harding and Mr. Lord at the last business meeting of the government two weeks ago, and the result shown by the final balancing of the books came as a gratifying surprise to the budget bureau officers.

Three major factors operated to create this surplus in place of the deficit of $823,000,000 indicated a year ago by estimates of receipts and expenditures. They were a decrease in operating expenses and an increase in customs receipts and internal taxes.

Despite the reduction of approximately $366,000,000 from the early estimates of the government's running expenses, the federal establishment still is a three and a half billion dollar business. Actual cash withdrawals from the treasury for the year were $3,695,000,000. Appropriations made by congress for all purposes for the year totalled $3,946,000,000.

The actual decrease in operating expenses this year, as compared to those a year ago, was $265,000,000, and it was stated that this was the result largely of executive pressure of the departments for holding down of all expenditures.

MARKT HIT NEW LOW LEVEL

Official Rate on Coin Is Five Ten-Thousandths of a Cent.

New York.—Nearly two hundred thousand German marks, which had a nominal value of $47,600 before the war, could be purchased in the local foreign exchange market for $1. The official rate quota for marks was five ten-thousandths of a cent each, the lowest ever recorded.

The further collapse in the mark followed publication of the weekly reichsbank statement showing a weekly increase in note circulation of nearly two trillion two hundred billion marks, bringing the total to more than thirteen trillion.

$28,000 Sanitarium Yearly Expense.

Moorhead, Minn.—Sand Beach sanatarium will need $28,000 to cover running expenses for the coming year, according to the budget made out by Dr. Bowdish, superintendent, and presented to the board of directors at the meeting held last week. The sanitarium is maintained jointly by Clay and Becker counties. The budget calls for about $14,000 from each county. Reports are out that the state is to investigate, what some term an unusually high cost of maintaining the institution.

This combination will include Myron Hutchinson and Joe Armstrong, present state champion, two players who are warranted to give the Duluth players all the action they want.

Hibbing—The smallest verdict ever recorded in district court here, one for 6 cents, was awarded plaintiffs in the case of Shevohuk and Novel vs. A. C. Schirmer, member of a former plumbing board. The plaintiffs sued for $5,000, alleging the board injured their business by demanding observance of sanitation rules as prescribed by the board and that the board discriminated against them.

Duluth—Judge W. A. Cant held that the stripping of the "North Forty" of Hibbing open pit mine would not damage adjacent property and business, and denied $6,000,000 in claims to about 400 property owners in an order filed in district court. The village of Hibbing, however, was allowed $296,841.53 for the public improvements on the quarter section termed the "North Forty," that will have to be torn up to mine the iron ore.

Austin—The $10,000 White Leghorn rooster at the Oaksdale farms at Le-Roy has lost the sight of one of his eyes. This bird is probably the most widely advertised individual of the entire chicken population of the world. When "Cy" Thompson was in his glory he divided popularity with this rooster, whose reputation was made by the money "Cy" spent in advertising. Descendants of this rooster have been sold to every civilized nation on earth, and have brought the highest prices.

Owatonna—The formal opening of the new home office building of the Minnesota Implement Mutual Fire Insurance company, which also houses the headquarters of the Minnesota Implement Dealers association, will take place with a banquet to officers of the company.

TO RELIEVE PAIN AND BACKACHE

Women May Depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I had heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that when I realized I needed to take something to relieve my pains and backache, and to help build me up I began to take that. I had been sick off and on for years and barely weighed a hundred pounds, but now I have had such good results that I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to every one."—Mrs. J. J. BIEBER, 3939 18th Ave. South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Finds a True Friend

"Every woman who values her health should be proud to have a true friend like the Vegetable Compound," says Mrs. W. E. Shaw, 3227 Walnut Street, Chicago, Illinois. "I had female weakness so badly that I could not stand on my feet. Half of my time was spent in bed and I had pains in my back which were unbearable. I tried everything I could think of to help myself, and when a friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began taking it at once. I recommend it without hesitation."

All Off, With Gravity!

An inventor in California announces that he has succeeded in producing a ray which "shuts off" the power of gravity. A few years ago nobody would have paid serious attention to such an announcement, but science, by its marvelous accomplishments, has brought man to such a state of credulousness he is incapable of saying "impossible!" to any assertion.—New York Herald.

Think twice before extracting the mighty dollar from your pocket to invest in a get-rich-quick scheme.

Help That Achy Back!

Are you dragging around, day after day, with a dull, unceasing backache? Are you lame in the morning; bothered with headaches, dizziness and urinary disorders? Feel tired, irritable and discouraged? Then there's surely something wrong, and likely it's kidney weakness. Don't neglect it! Get back your health while you can. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands of ailing folks. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By Charles Tenney Jackson

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"I AM MISS LESTRON"

SYNOPSIS—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an old-time friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready.

—3—

"I have not seen her, but there was a buzz when she appeared among us. Of an illustrious Tory family, we are told, that fled from New York to Canada after the old revolution. You should know, sir!"

"There were two women—" said Sazarac slowly. "The man took care I was not introduced. I think he assured them I was a common gambler. That, sir, is why I took his measure at the cards—that he put his women to despise me. I am sorry that he forced his game upon me to his own ruin."

"The slave girl!" chuckled Dominique. "They say his lady's maid. I warrant she berated the colonel over losing the servant to you!"

"A woman on a card—" rumbled Beluche. "It made me think of old days at Grand Terre—women against gold . . . and the traffic and the rum—e-oh!"

The stranger was watching young De Almonaster sharply. "You are curiously constrained, sir?"

"It is nothing—" Raoul laughed shortly.

"Tell me what was on your lips the moment before!"

"Oh, nothing! The coffee-houses must have their scandal!"

"What then, sir? I have sensed some jest among the tavern drinkers?"

The count shrugged. The two old buccaneers stirred uneasily. They had heard that tone, the tigerish awakening of the master, in days of blood and splintering decks.

"Monsieur," went on Sazarac, as if coming from a mood he wished to put away, "my game was fair. As for the wench, I did not want her. Nor shall I claim her now. The colonel's lady need not fear for her yellow maid."

"In very truth—" blurted De Almonaster. "That is why they laugh! If the gossip is true, Carr's act was that of a poltroon!"

"What is the gossip? That I dare not claim this wager?"

He was upon the young man now, his luminous eyes narrowing fiercely, the line deepening upon his lean bronzed cheeks. Raoul tried to evade him. "Come! They laugh—at what?"

"The tale, sir, runs about the coffee-houses—but I do not, for a moment, credit it—that, on the river trip, your eye was taken by his wife's companion. The latest beauty of our Esplanade! And—the story, sir, is that—as a jest, he wagered her against your gold, knowing well—"

The young man broke off as if ashamed to voice the rest.

"Go on!" thundered Sazarac. "You shall prove the word! I win at a toss an unknown chattel! The jest is that I dare not claim the lady's maid!"

"That is not the point, Monsieur. The lady had no maid. The girl in Carr's mind was the one who took your eye upon the packet. Free, white—equal to his wife in station—"

He was silenced by the tense breathing of the older man. Then Sazarac stood quietly back. The two buccaneers were silent at his mood.

"Carr would roar with laughter if you so much as mentioned the debt. Of course he did not dream it would come to the lady's ears—that would be infamy beyond conception. An evil jest of a drunken fool. But, doubtless," added Raoul apologetically, "there is no truth to the gossip."

The captain was gazing at the stars above the river. Old Dominique rubbed his velvet waistcoat. Beluche fingered his sword of Cartagena.

Sazarac at length spoke absently: "About the wineshops they spread the jest?"

"Ah," murmured De Almonaster, "if the story is true!"

"The scoundrel deserves not a challenge, but a lashing from here to the German Coast levee," grunted Dominique; "but no, it is impossible. Go claim your black-faced wench, my captain. The colonel's wife may give you a tongue-lashing, but think how she will scotch him!"

"The wench can lacky around the emperor's suite when we sail—" grinned Beluche sourly. "For I am of a mind that Jean is to command!"

"What nonsense, old dog! I—in such madness!" The captain stared past the schooner's ghostly sails against the stars . . . The Count de Almonaster alone seemed to guess his thoughts and he was silent.

"The Seraphine—" growled Beluche again. "A prettier sight for a sea man's eyes never the sun shone on! Fast—unknown in all the ports, gunned to battle the best of them! Ho, Dominique!—think of her slipped free on the heels of the traffic! Name o' God—the fat housecat ships afloat these days when the last black flag has vanished!"

"Ah, me!" sighed the honest councilor. "It was but last October that we hanged three buccaneers in the Plaza—taken off the Belize. I went to the country the day that the three good lads danced on air. It was sad—I drooled three hours over my luncheon. Old days are not so far . . . why, but fifteen years agone we were at the Red house on Grand Terre! But fifteen—and none durst lay a ship in past the guns of our fort, or claim customs on a bale of silks we offered the city! Ah, me—and I am fat—an honest alderman!"

The two old fellows turned to the lost leader. The admiral of Cartagena plucked his sleeve. "A ship—and you cannot linger forever, disguised, in this dull town . . . and I have letters of marque from Colombia as well!"

Sazarac was not listening. Now he turned to De Almonaster as the one who delicately read his thoughts.

"You will challenge, of course—for the lady's sake—" said Raoul.

"Tonight I shall claim my wager from Colonel Carr," answered Sazarac quietly. "Bond girl or free, I will go knock at the gates of hell for her—and we shall see who, of the town, laughs loudest!"

"I recall you won on the ace of hearts," sighed Dominique. "Sazarac wins the lady of the jesting. But Sazarac! . . . Nom de Dieu! What shall they say Jean Lafitte had to do with Sazarac's winning? The American governor would build another scaffold in the Place d'Armes."

"Out of all the deep swamp from Spanish Gap to the Teche you would see old cutthroats pouring to wreck it about his ears—" grunted Beluche. "Black or white, let him seize his winning! Ho, this Sazarac! A good ship, and Sazarac! The wide sea, and Sazarac! Dominique—ho, robber—listen!"

"Be still!" muttered the alderman. "See that policeman by the city lamp? Tut, tut—this will not do—this howling!"

CHAPTER III

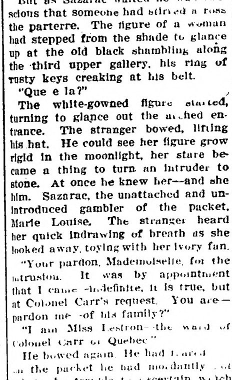
The Wager Is Claimed.

The shimmer of a young moon lay in the wide stone arch of the Hotel Orleans on the rue Chartres when, with the abrupt stride and bearing of a soldier, Captain Gaspar Sazarac, late of the American explorations, turned within it. The old concierge arose to greet the cloaked figure.

"Fellow, you will say to the British officer, Colonel Carr, that Captain Sazarac is at his pleasure."

"Oui, M'sieu!"

The old free man of color hobbled up the dim stairs. The visitor stood in the shadows absorbed in the peace of this quiet spot.



Perfect In the Moonlight, the Dark Eyes Cold, Scornful—

But as Sazarac waited he was conscious that someone had stirred across the parterre. The figure of a woman had stepped from the shade to glance up at the old black shambling along the third upper gallery, his ring of rusty keys creaking at his belt.

"Que e la?"

The white-gowned figure started, turning to glance out the arched entrance. The stranger bowed, lifting his hat. He could see her figure grow rigid in the moonlight, her stare became a thing to turn an intruder to stone. At once he knew her—and she him. Sazarac, the unattached and unintroduced gambler of the packet, Marie Louise. The stranger heard her quick indrawing of breath as she looked away, toying with her ivory fan.

"Your pardon, Mademoiselle, for the intrusion. It was by appointment that I came—indefinite, it is true, but at Colonel Carr's request. You are—pardon me—of his family?"

"I am Miss Lestron—the ward of Colonel Carr of Quebec."

He bowed again. He had heard on the packet he had mordantly not taken the trouble to ascertain which was the wife of the English officer. But now there came some surge of feeling he could not explain. He had been stung to folly, that was it—conscious of no other desire, tonight, save to confront Carr, fling an insult at him that no man might endure; challenge and kill him under the oaks of the Bayou St. John road. And now he was gazing on the fairest face that all his adventuring life had shown him. Perfect in the moonlight, the dark eyes cold, scornful; the shrug of her white shoulders above the lace corsage—apparently Miss Lestron had been going to the opera of the Theater d'Orleans, where, he recalled, Rose de Vries appeared tonight in "Le Prophete." But the hour was late for this.

"I think, sir—you cannot see him. It happens—" She glanced up warily at the silent galleries where the concierge was mumbling away ineffectually on his return. "Colonel Carr will not receive anyone tonight."

She turned half from him with an air of dismissal. The stranger bowed once more. His heart was beating with a curious relief. It was plain that the girl did not know of the infamous jest with which all the coffee houses were ringing. He knew now he would pocket the insult; a duel was imposible, for it would drag her name deeper into the mire. Carr had guessed aright; Sazarac could not claim his wager. In a private drinking bout Carr might roar with laughter at the gambler's dilemma; but, for the lady's sake, Sazarac would not challenge; nor would he permit talk of the affair to go about.

He drew his light cloak closer as he turned to go. But as he reached the areaway with its drowsy tinkle of flowing water, he started at a cry that rang wildly through the courtyard, the scream of a negro, and a vengeful shout above.

Turning, he saw the girl in the court staring upward. Then her arms were flung out in appeal. And again that choked cry of a woman, but not in fear—imperious, determined:

"Have done beating the girl! What?—and you strike me?"

Leaping back to stare up, the visitor saw a woman crushed out over the iron lattice rail. The moonlight struck the epauletted shoulder of Colonel Carr, who seemed bent on hurling her to the courtyard. The girl below cried out again hotly. And with a mutter Sazarac sprang past her, up the curving staircase until he gained the third gallery.

The wife of the British colonel was choked and helpless against the railing as the stranger reached them. His hand was upon his sword, but with the other powerful arm he caught the man squarely by the collar, tore him away, flung him headlong against the wall—and then stood quietly, the gilded insignia of His Majesty's Service in his hand. Glancing at the epaulette, he hurled it to the court below. Miss Lestron had followed past the cowering serving-girl bleeding on the staircase.

"Madame—" she cried sharply, "are you hurt?"

"But for this genteman, I had died," the wife gasped, and then checked it with new scorn. Madame Carr stopped abruptly, her eyes upon the unknown gambler of the river packet.

"This," began the girl quietly, "is Captain Sazarac of the American Service. We—must thank you, sir, even for this regrettable aid. You perceive the affair, without doubt—a private matter, of which we entreat—as you are a—gentleman—"

She had hesitated, her dark eyes on him, her lip quivering in the moonlight. A shuffle on the gallery floor; the drunken man was getting unsteadily to his feet. He reeled, grasped the railing, cleared his dazed eyes, and stared.

"Sazarac—bah! Come then Sazarac, the gambler! Eh—" he lurched forward, and held himself up. "Ho, the porter!—have this fellow thrown out who dares invade my privacy!"

"Lionel!" the wife muttered, and then was still.

Monsieur Sazarac bowed to her quietly.

"What I have done, Madame—I am answerable for. The matter explains itself, doubtless. It shall not pass my lips."

"Sazarac—[illegible] me," [illegible] the colonel. "A trickster fellow—a sharper of the packet trade—eh, get you within your rooms, Madame."

"You precede me, sir," she [illegible] steadily, "you are in no condition to converse."

"Converse? Eh—Sazarac here? I remember—" he lurched to the rail with hoarse laughter. "An appointment, eh—Captain Sazarac!"

"The matter is settled," commented the other quietly. "You will permit me to depart."

He was passing when the disheveled officer staggered to the narrow space between rail and wall. "He has come, my—dear, to—ha, ha!—perchance to claim his wager!"

"Sir, you will permit me to pass."

"Not so soon, sir—Captain Sazarac—whoever you are. Ha-ha—it was a stroke—a coup—you will admit that, even if I lost, eh?"

Red-faced, leering, he stumbled nearer, laughing loudly.

> "I love you," he said quietly. "You will remember that."

Propaganda last year induced the farmers to plant a large acreage of potatoes and the bottom fell out of potato prices. The same sort of thing caused a large acreage of rye to be sown last fall and the crop is almost a failure. Then attention was turned to a large acreage of flax and with the probable result of low prices. Thru all these changing conditions the dairy cow has been contentedly chewing her cud and producing the cash.

YOU ARE HEREBY SUMMONED to be and appear before the undersigned, one of the Justices of the Peace in and for said County, on the 30th day of July, 1923, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at my office in the City of Warren, in said County, to answer to the complaint of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank of Thief River Falls, a Corporation, Plaintiff, in a civil action, wherein the plaintiff claims the sum of Sixty-three and 25-100 Dollars ($63.25), and interest on that sum at ten per cent from May 23rd, 1921. Should you fail to appear at the time and place aforesaid, judgment will be rendered against you, upon the evidence adduced by said plaintiff for such sum as he shall show himself entitled to.

Given under my hand and dated this 21st day of June, 1923.

Oscar Pearson
Justice of the Peace

A Traitor to His Country

In signing the bill repealing the prohibition law in New York state, Governor Smith evidently takes the position that it is not the business of a state to enforce federal laws, and particularly the Eighteenth Amendment. This in face of the fact that the second paragraph of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States declares:

"The congress and the several states shall have concurrent powers to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Also in face of the fact that Governor Smith and every policeman, sheriff and constable, and every state officers when they took the oath of office, solemnly swore they would support the Constitution.

It is just as well that Governor Smith and his legislature have taken their stand thus early. It gives the great law abiding men and women voters of all parties ample warning. We predict that the great national political conventions of next year will overwhelm the friends of alcohol.

The Shield suggests that the fraternal conventions of this year should again speak on this matter.

No other organization of men and woman is more concerned in the purity and welfare of the home than the fraternals, and no other thing ever so threatened the home as has alcohol.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers

Washington

Washington—Bankers organize to oppose extensive revision of the tariff law by the tariff commission.

Washington—The last act in connection with the funding of the British war debt was completed at the treasury department with the surrender of $4,600,000,000 in bonds by Great Britain.

Washington—The government finished its introduction of direct testimony in the trial of Charles W. Morse and others on charges of conspiracy in connection with the building of the war-time ship fleet.

Washington—Statement issued by Senator Oscar Underwood indicates clearly that he is a candidate for the democratic nomination for president and that he favors a foreign policy, the object of which would be the rehabilitation of Europe and establishment of permanent world peace.

Washington — Administration officials believe that the danger period has been passed in ship liquor controversy with foreign powers, foreign ships no longer insisting on violating territory regulations and a better understanding of the American position having been reached by British authorities.

Washington—Inauguration of a special monthly reporting service in the leading dairying states to enable dairymen to plan their operations in the light of future prospects as indicated by available statistics on current milk production, prices, stocks and changes in dairy herds has been announced by the department of agriculture.

Washington—Decision to call a meeting in Washington on September 13 of the United States group of Red Cross organizations was reached at a conference of Red Cross and Pan-American officials. The September meeting will be preliminary to the Western world conference of the league of Red Cross societies to be held in Buenos Aires beginning November 26.

Washington—The passing of the last of the soldier guards who were on duty at the Ford theater when President Lincoln was shot was reported to the pension bureau in a cablegram from the American consulate at Hull, England. The message notified the bureau to discontinue "because of death" the pension of William Hall, Civil war veteran. Hall served in Company H, Twelfth Illinois cavalry. He returned to England, his birthplace, after the war.

Domestic

New York—Declaring the lives of R. R. Moton, president of Tuskegee Institute and of Negro surgeons at the United States Veterans' hospital at Tuskegee, Ala., had been threatened by masked mobs, the National Association for Advancement of Colored People wired President Harding urging that he send federal troops to protect them.

Springfield, Ill.—Exoneration of the military department of the state of blame in connection with the Herrin mine riots of June, 1922, is contained in a minority report of the house investigating committee, filed by Representatives Pierce of Boone county and Curran of Chicago, two republican members of the committee.

San Francisco—Lure of gold has lost none of its romantic glamor. The good ship Fred J. Wood, a four masted schooner, set sail with 125 men, women and children aboard to search for gold in Alaska. A co-operative undertaking, those on board chipped in $200 apiece to outfit the schooner and if they "make a million" they will share alike.

Elmira, N. Y.—Manned by four aviators in the federal service, a motorized balloon of a new type dropped upon the held of the Aircraft corporation at Hammondsport, completing a journey from Cook field, Dayton, Ohio. The balloon is said to have made a record flight for this type of airship. It is to be used by the United States department of agriculture in an effort to fight the ravages of the gipsy moth.

New York—The steamship Leviathan reconditioned by the government at a cost of more than $8,000,000 and now on the high seas on her first trip under the American flag in the trans-Atlantic passenger service, "never made any money and never will," Rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett, commandant at the Brooklyn navy yard, declared in an address before the Brooklyn Rotary club. The great liner, like the British Majestic and Berengaria, is too large and expensive for practical operation, he said.

Sistersville, W. Va.—Two men and three children were injured, one probably fatally, in an explosion of gasoline at the Brown-Hiers gasoline plant near Wade, Ohio, a short distance from here.

Springfield, Mass.—Many persons were injured when police clashed with men who were showing their sympathy with striking telephone girls. When a crowd massed near the telephone exchange more than 100 reserves were called out to reinforce a dozen regular police officers. Flower pots, bottles and large firecrackers were thrown at the police.

Sports

Milwaukee, Wis.—Walter (Speedy) Ferch died in a hospital here from injuries received in an automobile race at the state fair park. Ferch's car skidded while rounding a curve. The car following crashed into Ferch's.

Chicago—William T. Tilden II. national champion, defeated Walter Wesbrook of Detroit, 6-3, 6-3, in the fourth round of the men's singles in the Illinois state tennis tournament. Earlier Wesbrook had defeated Frank O'Connell, Chicago, 6-1, 6-1.

Ringside, Shelby, Mont.—Although he lost the decision to Champion Jack Dempsey after 15 rounds of vicious fighting, Tommy Gibbons of St. Paul is the hero of the boxing world for he gained the honor of being the first man to stay the limit with the Utah "Tigerman," since Dempsey won the championship from Jess Willard at Toledo, July 4, 1919.

Wimbledon—Suzanne Lenglen still is supreme among women tennis players of the world. With ease and certainty the French star defeated Miss Kathleen McKane, best of Britain's tennis playing women, 6-2, 6-2, and so won for the fifth successive season the title of world's champion. It was the fifth meeting between this pair of stars, and, with one exception, it was the worst beating Suzanne has administered to the lively British girl.

Shelby, Mont.—The approximate total of gate receipts at the Dempsey-Gibbons heavyweight title bout was $201,485, according to figures made public by the Montana collector of internal revenue. The department of internal revenue will collect a total of $22,448.50 on the receipts, it was announced. Approximately 2,300 tickets in the $20 seat section were sold at half price. Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager, fell approximately $48,000 short of getting the third $100,000 of the champion's guarantee.

Kansas City, Mo.—Although but 5 of the 12 motor cars which started in the 250-mile race at the Kansas City speedway finished, and the average time of the victor, Eddie Hearne, did not compare favorably with Tommy Milton's winning speed at the oval last September, drivers declared the race a valuable experiment from which racing and pleasure cars may profit. Hearne took the $9,000 winner's purse with an average speed of 105.76 miles an hour. Milton, who was forced out early in the race, averaged 107.86 miles an hour in the September contest.

Foreign

Tokio—Miss Jane Addams, noted Chicago social worker, was operated on in a hospital here for a tumor of the breast. The surgeons found nothing to indicate the growth was malignant.

London—Senator Hiram Johnson, who has been studying the political and economic situation in Europe for several weeks, will sail for home from Scherbourg on the Leviathan on July 17.

Constantine, Algeria — President Masaryk of Czech-Slovakia was taken suddenly ill here while touring Notrhern Africa for his health. Because of his age his condition is regarded as serious.

London—The house of lords gave a second reading to the bill by which wives would be granted a divorce on the same grounds as men. Lord Birkenhead insisted that "rich wives should pay alimony the same as husbands."

Sydney, N. S.—Scores of rioters were injured, several of them seriously, in a clash with police and soldiers near the coke ovens of the British Empire Steel corporation plant. The fighting started when tin-hatted soldiers preceded by mounted police charged the mobs with fixed bayonets.

Tours, France—One person was killed and 14 injured, two seriously, during the running of the automobile grand prix here, which was won by De Graves, driving a Sunbeam car. The accident occurred at the hairpin turn. The Devisnaya entry failed to make the curve on the first round, ran into a fence and then collided with a tree, ploughing through part of the crowd.

Berlin—The month of July ushers in new and terrifying prices all along the line. The German people, already in a desperate mood, will be faced with a new tariff affecting the prices of bread, milk, coal, gas, electricity, shoes, haircuts, school fees, postal, telephone and freight and passenger rates on railroads—in fact, on almost every item pertaining to necessities of life.

Berne—The first of a series of giant airplanes ordered by the Russian soviet government from the German works at Friedrichshafen on Lake Constance, was delivered in Moscow. The planes of a new type of the Dornier comet, built almost exclusively of aluminum, carry four passengers besides the pilot and mechanic. They have engines of 200 horsepower with an average speed of 100 miles an hour.

Catania—A laborer working near the hamlet of Ognia has found two ancient bronze vases containing 300 gold coins dated 300 B. C. The rarity and intrinsic value of the find have caused its worth to be estimated at several millions lire.

Halifax, N. S.—Passengers and crew of the steamship Advance which went ashore on Shut-in-Island in a dense fog were taken off safely by tugboats. The vessel later broke in half. The steamship carried 75 passengers from Boston for Halifax and St. Johns, N. F. The crew numbered 55.

SLOPE FARMERS ARE SUCCESSFUL

Farm Survey Finds that Many Farmers in Slope Country Have No Debts.

WHEAT YIELDS GOOD

Presence of Good Dairy Cows, Children for Help, and Careful Methods of Farming Make Successful Farms.

Fargo, N. D.—Farmers who do not owe a dollar, not even a store bill, have been found in the Missouri Slope country in the survey of successful farms which is being conducted there this month by the farm management department of the North Dakota Agricultural college, according to Rex E. Willard, who is spending a few days in Fargo, and will return to work with the survey forces there this week.

"Presence of sufficient dairy cows to bring in an annual income of from $400 to $800, and of a goodly number of children were the outstanding characteristics of the most successful farms," Mr. Willard reports. "Cost of hired help is kept at a minimum on those farms where the children do a considerable part of the work, and, regardless of whether this is a desirable state of affairs, those are the farms where the most money is being made. Extreme frugality and low standards of living were also found to play an important part in producing profits on farm activities.

Wheat Average High.

"Through raising livestock and practicing crop rotation, a number of the successful farmers there have averaged 12 bushels of wheat per acre over a considerable period of time. One farmer south of Glen Ullin reported that during the past 15 years he had never grown wheat on the same land more than two successive years, that he had never stubbled in grain and had always plowed in the fall when possible. The lowest yield realized in that period was seven bushels per acre in 1916 when the crop was hit by black rust, and his average for the 15 years was 12 bushels per acre."

Mr. Willard reports that the survey of successful farms which is being conducted in co-operation with the United States department of agriculture is about half finished, and that some very valuable information is being accumulated. Farms are now being visited in the New England and Amidon neighborhood. Bowman, Hettinger, Mott, and Carson come next, and the survey will be finished at Flasher July 18. Material accumulated is now being prepared in statistical form and a preliminary report will be issued in December incorporated with the state-wide report on detailed farm records for 1922.

SIX DEAD IN SUNDAY STORM

Three Killed in North Dakota and Three in Canada.

Fargo, N. D.—Three persons were reported killed in Moosetown, Sask., and three in North Dakota, and property damaged to the extent of $1,500,000 in a terrific rain and hail storm which swept over the northcentral and northeastern part of the state and Saskatchewan Sunday afternoon.

At Galesburg, N. D., Oscar Brathold, 15, was killed when lightning struck a barn on the farm of his uncle, Gust Brathold, Irvin Brathold, cousin of the dead boy, was stunned. Five horses in the barn were killed. The dead boy was the son of Mrs. Morton Brathold of Page.

Woman Killed.

Mrs. Carl Sasdrick, living eight miles south of Goodrich in Sheridan county, was killed instantly when the roof of an old sod house, carried away by the heavy wind in Sunday's storm, struck her in the neck.

Mrs. Sasdrick left her house in the heaviest part of the storm to care for her chickens. She was attending to them when the wind carried the sod house roof away. She was 60 years old.

In Oliver county, at Center, Ray Derfloff was killed when a bolt of lightning struck a church in which he was attending services. Much damage was done in Oliver, Mercer and Dunn counties and will probably reach $200,000 when a full appraisement of the loss is made.

Does Heavy Damage.

Two terrific storms striking Carrington, Sykeston, Cathay, Barley, and Turtle Lake did damage estimated at more than $500.000. The area between Bismarck and Minot was swept by a storm, many trees being uprooted and barns blown down.

Germany Blamed for Low Currency.

London.—The German government itself is responsible for the catastrophic depreciation of Germany's currency, is the finding of the reichstag's committee of inquiry which has issued its report, says a Central News dispatch from Berlin. The report, adds the message, says that the collapse of the mark was particularly due to extensive purchases of foreign coal by the railway administration without notifying the reichsbank or other authorities.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Northfield—Ben Zimmerman, a farmer living east of here, was seriously injured in an attack by a bull.

Virginia—Purchase of the circulation of the Virginia Daily Press, formerly the Daily Virginian, was announced by the Virginia Daily Enterprise. Suspension of the Press leaves the Enterprise the only daily newspaper in this city.

Rochester—Alderman J. T. Lemmon of Rochester's city council, is believed to have suffered internal injuries when the automobile in which he, his wife and daughter, and three friends were riding, overturned near Plainview.

Brainerd—The experimental station at the village of Crow Wing is obtaining very good results in its research work with alfalfa, clover and other tame hay. There are 20 acres in this plot, which is operated by the Crow Wing county farm in conjunction with the agricultural college.

Willmar—The Miller circuit Luther League's annual convention which opened at Kirkhoven closed here with 1,000 people attending three sessions. The principal address of the convention was delivered by Rev. J. C. K. Preus of Byron, president of the Southern Minnesota circuit.

McGregor—A skeleton believed to be that of an Indian war chief was unearthed on Indian Point, or Battle Island, by workmen excavating in preparation for a Fourth of July celebration. The relic was found 18 miles northeast of here in a spot where numerous Indian remains have been uncovered.

Northfield—Northfield business men have organized a Merchant's association.

Faribault—Major Philip B. Peyton, was relieved by the War department from detail as professor of military science and tactics at Shattuck school, Faribault, Minnesota, effective at the close of the present school year. He will go to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana for assignment with the 11th infantry.

Rochester—Sunday funerals will be abolished here if Rochester citizens heed the request of pastors. The ministerial association has made public resolutions asking the community to do away with Sunday burial rites. It is a busy day for the pastors, they asserted, and added that undertakers and cemetery caretakers demand a day of rest.

Luverne—Oil signs have been found about 10 miles from here on land belonging to J. S. Thompson of St. Paul, in a well which is being drilled for water. The first indications of oil were discovered at a depth of 368 feet. Mr. Thompson ordered work on the well suspended until he could get a core drill to make further investigations.

Eveleth — Eveleth is experiencing one of its greatest building periods of the past five years with more than 30 projects now under way. Residential property is being constructed at a record gait, and from present indications, the year's total will show the biggest and most extensive home building program of the last decade, according to Mayor V. E. Essling.

Red Wing—At Pequot there was a reunion of mother and son that ended a search the mother has carried on for 17 years for her lost boy. The mother is Mrs. Lillian Smith, employed at Breezy Point Lodge, a Pequot summer resort, while the boy is Arthur Linda, who for two months has been a bell boy at the St. James hotel here.

Forest Lake—One dead, two injured, and property damage estimated at $60,000, was reported as result of a fire in a garage, which burned for eight hours and threatened to sweep through the community. Sparks from a motor set fire to gasoline being pumped from a railroad tank car, to a garage storage tank, causing an explosion.

Minneapolis—Ordered committed to the state institution for the insane at St. Peter by Judge W. W. Bardwell in district court, Arthur Sundberg, who shot and killed his sweetheart, Ruth Johnson, is to be taken to St. Peter. Under the statute provisions in the case, Sundberg's confinement at the state institution is to continue until such time as he shall be adjudged mentally healthy again.

Virginia—Miss Marie Watkins, who has been secretary of the Virginia Y. W. C. A. since its organization two years ago, tendered her resignation at the meeting of the board of directors of the organization. Miss Watkins gave as reason for her resignation the fact that she has accepted a position as industrial secretary of the Minneapolis association. Miss Watkins was formerly connected with the Y. W. C. A. in Duluth.

Duluth—Formal opening of the McDougall Terminal Warehouse company, the headquarters of the Minnesota Atlantic Transit company, Duluth's new $1,500,000 project, which provides for an all water route to the Atlantic seaboard, took place here.

Duluth—Following an animated debate it was voted at the thirty-ninth annual conference of the Swedish Evangelical Mission meeting here, to change the constitution of the church body to limit the term of office of president and secretary to two terms of four years each. Heretofore the terms of office has been unlimited.

Northfield—John G. Mohn, president of the Mohn Printing company and editor of The United American, died suddenly at his home here following an attack of heart trouble.

Olivia—Gustav Abraham, aged 68, died at his farm home near here, as the result of injuries sustained when a tree, which was being cut down, fell and struck him on the head.

Marshall—A jury in the district court here returned a verdict of $15,000 in favor of F. Kowalski of Waseca for injuries he received while working as a brakeman on the North Western road.

Montevideo—Opening of the new $150,000 Eagle building here was one of the features at the Fourth of July celebration. A parade, a ball game and other sports were included in the program. About 6,000 people attended the celebration.

Duluth—The constitutionality of the eight-tenths of a mill tax levied in 1921 and 1922 for the relief of certain school districts has been upheld by Judge Bert Fesler of St. Louis county district court.

Northfield—Herbert Jachim, aged 21, was killed here when he came in contact with an electric current of 66,000 volts in the switchroom of the Northern States Power company's station.

Owatonna—Units of the Minnesota Federation of Women's clubs are uniting in a movement to improve the health of public school children here by furnishing milk to children who are underweight.

Ivanhoe—The Farmers' elevator at Arco was struck by lightning in a thunderstorm and burned to the ground with all its contents, including 3,500 bushels of grain. Loss is estimated at $16,000, partially covered by insurance.

Spring Grove—Eldred Johnson, aged 30, of Spring Grove, a former service man and first commander of the American Legion post in this city, was drowned at a family picnic while swimming in a creek at Quandahl, Iowa, just across the state line.

St. Cloud—About 100 employees of the Great Northern railroad at the Waite Park carshops have been laid off. The reduction in the force was necessitated, officials said, by too large a force for the amount of work on hand.

Waseca—Robert J. Johnson, engineer, an employee of the Chicago & North Western railway for 50 years, and for half of that period working on the Minnesota division out of the local division point as a freight engineer, has retired. He has been pensioned by the railroad.

Brainerd—Committees in charge have completed arrangements and a tentative program for the annual convention of the Northern Minnesota Editorial association here July 25 to 29. Editors from every district of the northern part of the state will attend.

Minneapolis—Many babies in Minnesota have a better chance to live and grow strong with the taking effect of the "filled milk" law passed by the last legislature. The law prohibits the manufacture or sale in Minnesota of milk or cream from which the butterfat is taken and another oil or fat substituted.

Owantonna—A reunion at Mineral Springs park and visits to the ruins of the old high school building, in which they received their education, and the new $600,000 high school building, marked the passing of two decades since their graduation for members of the class of 1903 of the Owatonna high school. All but a few of the original class were present for the reunion.

Willmar—The national committee of Yeomen will make its second visit to Green Lake, in this country, to consider it as a site for the proposed $20,000,000 home of this fraternity, it was announced. The plans call for 150 cottages, with an administration building and its large system of equipment. The initial expenditures will be $12,000,000, with $8,000,000 to be expended later for improvements.

Owatonna—Rotarians of the "ninth and one-half district" of the Rotary international, including the St. Paul, Owatonna, Faribault, Fairmont, Albert Lea, Austin and Mankato clubs, plan to have their second annual picnic and business meeting at the Austin Country club, on July 19. The "district" was formed when the Owatonna club invited the other clubs to a picnic here last year.

Willmar—The local team trimmed the St. Anthony I. O. O. F. team from Minneapolis to a shutout Sunday, 4 to 0. Chief Gunder was the hurler for the home team and fanned 18 of the Minneapolis batters.

Breckenridge—A mother and a year old baby were almost instantly killed, the husband and father is probably fatally injured, a son, 14, had all his limbs broken and two other children, occupants of a small automobile, were bruised and cut when a Northern Pacific freight train crashed into the car at a street crossing here at midnight.

Park Rapids—Work was commenced on construction of a state fish hatchery building here. It will be 24x40 feet, reinforced with concrete, and the equipment will consist of 200 glass jars for hatching fish eggs. The capacity will be 100,000,000 fish fry in a season.

Brainerd—The county agricultural agents of Minnesota have selected Crow Wing county for their annual convention and will meet at Gull Lake on July 20, 21, 22 and 23. There are 75 county agents in Minnesota, all of whom belong to the association, as do 50 extension workers.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

Not Quite Rid of Her.

One day a friend came to our house who was an awful talker. A while later I heard the door slam, and rushed in, saying, "I know you're glad to get rid of her." To my embarrassment I found that she was still there and was talking to my brother, who was the one who came in when I thought it was her going out.—Exchange.

MRS. LINDQUIST TELLS WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did for Her

Kansas City, Mo.—"I was left in a very serious condition after childbirth and no one thought I could ever be any better. Then came the 'Change of Life' and I was not prepared for what I had to suffer. I had to go to bed at times to be perfectly quiet as I could not even stoop down to pick anything from the floor. I did not suffer any pain, but I was decidedly nervous and could not sleep. For nearly two years I was this way, and the doctor was frank enough to tell me that he could do no more for me. Shortly after this I happened to see in a newspaper an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. In a few days the medicine was in the house and I had begun its use and I took it regularly until I was well. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to others when I have the opportunity."—Mrs. MAY LINDQUIST, 2814 Independence Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

"HE MEANT ME!"

SYNOPSIS—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an old-time friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac.

"'Pon word, fellow, you had the effrontery to show up, then?"

Something in the cold eyes of the taller man stung through to his drunken brain. "I will not fight you, eh? Is that what you are thinking? Of course not—of course not, Captain Sazarac! I—of His Majesty's Service, and you—not a gentleman in the city could vouch for you!"

"Colonel Carr," put in the girl steadily, "will you cease?" She stepped nearer: "The gentleman but wishes to depart. The house will be aroused, the servants are gabbling now!"

"You will excuse him, sir." Madame Carr turned to the stranger; and even in her disarray, he saw that she was matronly beautiful, but hollow-eyed as one torn by ceaseless anxiety: "He does not know of what he speaks."

"I can speak that, Madame, that would put all Louisiana in an uproar. Langhorne, the consul, will open his eyes when—when—"

With a sudden furious movement Mrs. Carr closed his mouth. He threw her off violently. "Cease this, Madame! I am not a child, or fool! Already about this crack-brained city the clouds are gathering! From the Sabine country the Spaniards—"

"Be still!" She checked him with rising fury. In the moonlight her eyes held the glitter of a tigress. But the officer's drunken madness became uncontrollable.

"To your rooms, you women! Both of you! As for this man—" he turned again, staring abruptly at the tall cloaked figure; for the time, he had forgotten him: "Bah! He is here because—"

"We know," put in the elder woman coldly, "he has ruined you at cards—everything. The consul has informed me of this humiliation beyond words."

Carr was laughing evilly again. "Eh, well! The pot-house gallants saw it all. Oh, ho!—there were wagers that Captain Sazarac would not even dare lift his face again at the gaming-houses. He would find pretexts, he would invent reasons—indeed it was a shabby trick to put upon—even a packet gambler!"

There was a silence. Madame Carr was staring at the stranger.

"What is this, sir? I heard some silly story of the cardrooms—Madame des Trehan would not explain, but there was comment, upon the promenade, today. Sir, as my husband but shouts, laughing, will you enlighten us?"

Monsieur Sazarac stood with folded arms. The girl in white was watching him doubtfully. Suddenly she came nearer. There was almost pleading in her softness.

"Tell me. There was some cruel jest put upon you, sir?"

The stranger would not answer. Carr laughed hoarsely, lurching against the rail.

"The jest is this, ladies! Upon the packet trip, this man was all eyes for one of you. Chagrined that I would not introduce him, he was bent upon breaking me at cards. He had the luck of a cold devil even to the last throw at Maspero's. Eh, well, it was but a jest! The town chuckles over it. I wagered him—against his winnings of the packet, a bond girl of our household. He took it greedily—ha-ha!"

"Sir, we traveled with no servant save the public help," the wife put in.

"That is true." Carr straightened up with drunken gravity. "But he took the wager. He thought, evilly enough, there was a wench of San Domingo—fair as one of you. He was imbecile enough to yearn for her glances!"

"Your word, sir, if you recall?" said Sazarac gravely.

"A jest! Who would deem it but a cardroom jest!"

The stranger turned, as if to escape from an unpleasing situation. But the elder woman suddenly came between them. "But what is this curious thing they whisper of along the promenade? I caught a laugh, a pitying look!"

She swept scornfully upon her husband. "Did you, then, cheat at the cards?"

Carr roared his mirth: "No—on my honor! There was no need!"

"The affair is done," murmured the stranger. "Your pardon, Madame!"

But as he made to pass, Carr must gibe once more at him. "Your wager, sir? The prize you claim—which was it?"

The silence grew acute. The two women stared unbelievingly; the younger turned widening eyes upon the silent stranger.

"He told you—that?"

"Nothing, Mademoiselle. Allow me to depart!"

"He meant me! A girl of San Domingo! Bandied my name in the cardrooms—"

"You were not mentioned, Mademoiselle. I never knew your name before. You will allow me to go, Mademoiselle Lestron. It is enough—"

"It is not enough! You do not know all, sir!" She turned swiftly to the drunken colonel and struck him sharply in the face. "You dared this! You infamous coward! I—a slave of San Domingo—"

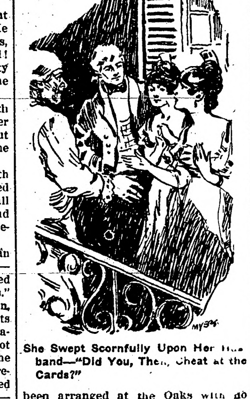
Carr stood in an abject sobering. "Louise, this is folly!"

"I shall speak! Whom could you mean?"

"Eh? A jest! I said, a jest—not meant for anyone's ears but his and mine! He had the impudence to come here—to claim—something—" Carr settled back on the rail uncertainly.

"Something?" Miss Lestron turned icily to Sazarac. "Sir, and what?"

"I do not know. I had no thought save to seek Colonel Carr and demand satisfaction. The affair could have been arranged at the Oaks with no breath of the quarrel's point. One of us should die . . . the other's lips sealed in honor. Was that not enough, Mademoiselle, for your protection?"



She Swept Scornfully Upon Her Husband—"Did You, Then, Cheat at the Cards?"

Sazarac, the river gamester, saw a curious light in her eyes. Gratefulness, scorn, or the brief interest in this idea of protecting her, he could not say which, for she turned at once to the other man. Her voice flowed on steadily but mounting to a peak of implacable contempt.

"On the turn of a card, sir? You played high—very high . . . an empire, perhaps, risked in a Chartres gambling house!"

"Will you be still?" blustered Carr, staggering forth. "A jest—I said a jest on him! Your name was not in it! I said a slave girl. Bah—I will go to Langhorne and borrow a wench to pay my debt, if that is the issue!"

"You had best both be still," warned the older woman frightened now. "Louise, come—this is no matter for a cardroom brawl. Sazarac—if he is vouched for as a gentleman in this city, must challenge. I suppose—ah, God! He will challenge—" And, passing them with high head but tear-dimmed eyes, Madame Carr went to her chambers.

"Bah," muttered Carr with sudden drunken sleepiness "Go home, Sazarac! You, to your rooms, Louise! My head aches with all this ranting! It was a jest. On Sazarac, because of his taking my last farthing—on Louise, because of her airs. Enough, it's done. Sazarac can challenge and be d—d. He can send a second—if he knows a gentleman in the city, which is improbable—when I am sober. My affair is in Langhorne's hands. Now, to bed!"

He staggered along the gallery. But suddenly, with a shrug, a bow—a face serene in the moonlight—Captain Sazarac addressed him.

"Sir, I am minded to recall my words. Now, I shall claim my wager!"

"I say—to bed—" mumbled Carr thickly. He reeled at his door, waved a palsied finger at them and crashed against the furniture within.

Miss Lestron stood at the balustrade of the winding staircase as the stranger was descending. A step below he turned:

"I claim my wager. Let them have a care who put a jest upon me in this town! The sea is near . . . and it is wide. Wide, Mademoiselle, and deep; and far—very far, is the way to its secret places."

"I do not understand." She was watching him intently. He had gone to the next turn of the staircase. The moonlight struck the silver of his sword hilt. She leaned forth, and her eyes struck fire from his own when he glanced up. "Far?" she whispered: "And it may be beautiful!"

He watched her lips. The perfume of the jasmined wall seemed to rise from the court and engage her; she seemed afloat in a purple sea formed by the shadows. A face, a form luminous in the mists of his dark years of remembrance. The soul of his youth was stirring . . . he had dared all, lost all, on decisions quick, hot, pregnant as this, in days long put behind.

"I love you," he said quietly. "You will remember that."

She heard his boot on the stones of the court. He was passing the pomegranate clump when he thought something flashed near him in the moonlight.

A white thing, a light thing—a feather, a petal in the air. But he saw no more, nor heard a sound from above. He went to the untenanted street, wondering if she had waited until his footsteps died away. He wondered why he had spoken; and then he laughed. Sazarac, the packet gamester . . . Jean Lafitte, last of the sea-adventurers—ghost of a vanished time, back to tread the streets where his life was not worth the flicker of a moonbeam in the jasmine screen below her window.

After he had gone, something did stir. A man crawled out from the shadows across the area, went to the gardened center of the court and searched under the fig and pomegranate leaves. Presently he muttered and straightened up, a white blossom in his hand.

"Eh?" he said. "A camellia . . . it has been in her hair. She was to wear it to the opera, and Carr's orgy tonight prevented. I would have seen her pass . . . she would have thought me a red-eyed beggar standing by the areaway, but I would have seen her pass."

John Jarvis stared up at the silent balcony. Then he, too, went his way.

"The Cafe la Veau Qui Tete—" he grumbled. "I shall put on my old waistcoat again to get drunk in. Sazarac! D—n this Sazarac! A flower from her hair, and the fool did not see it! A flower for Sazarac!"

At the Cafe la Veau he entered by the garden gate and went to sit among the huge wine tuns under the tiled shed. "Three measures of liquor and I could paint a white camellia against her hair," he mused; "but the taproom and I together could not paint love in her eye—for me."

After that he sought a bench and slept. Presently in came another and by the same stealthy passageway. A huge seaman, this, with broad hairy chest, and tattooed arms. He examined the sleeping painter, took off his coat and spread it above him. "He must be kept drunken and asleep," muttered Johanness. "The fool would shout it through the town—the Captain Jean returned, and meeting us old ghosts up from the islands! Enter, Old Slit-Nose! None here save John, the taproom avocat. A howl from him and he draws my knife point! Sit quiet and await. Our host gave me the keys and is abed . . . he prefers not to know what he should not know, like any wise man!"

"Jean, whom I painted at the famous isle! Jean!"

Try This Formula for Feet

Not alone upon the choice of shoes does the comfort of the feet depend. Even perfectly healthy, normal feet need particular daily care. With such care even tender feet become normal. After shopping or walking and at the close of the day, it is an excellent thing to bathe the feet in cold water, Julia W. Wolfe writes in the Health Builder. If you cannot endure the shock of cold water at first, begin with tepid water and add the cold water gradually. When it is convenient, the faucet—cold water—should be allowed to play upon the feet. The reaction of the cold water aids circulation and gives tone to the arteries. Use no soap in the tonic foot bath; free alkali, which might be present in the soap, tends to blister the feet. With this treatment continued daily, one's feet soon grow healthy and foot troubles are a thing of the past.

Fats and oils in the diet are two and one-fourth times more effective than either proteins or carbohydrates as sources of energy.

KEELER, AT 80, GOES TO WORK

After fourteen years of enforced idleness because of ill health, J. H. Keeler, widely-known Maryland citizen, has gained forty pounds at the age of eighty years and gone back to work every day. Mr. Keeler, who resides at 3706 Thirty-Second St., Mt. Ranier, Md., gives entire credit for his extraordinary rehabilitation to Tanlac.

"My stomach was in such terrible condition I could hardly digest a thing," says Mr. Keeler. "It would swell to nearly twice its normal size and I would have frightful pains through my stomach and back. I felt so weak, dizzy and miserable work was out of the question. In fact, my friends gave me up on three or four occasions.

"Five months ago I began taking Tanlac and improved from the very first bottle. I now eat anything on the table, have gained forty pounds, and am back at work every day. Actually, I feel like a boy again. It would be ungrateful of me not to praise Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

DUG WEALTH FROM HIGHWAY

Debris Containing Platinum, That Had Been Used for Road Building, Recovered in Germany.

Geluhausen, a sleepy town in a quiet German valley, has become a veritable treasure chest. Some time ago a large electric light bulb factory there was burned down. The ruins of the buildings were used to build roads.

In the course of time the price of platinum, a constituent used in the manufacture of the bulbs, rose beyond the dreams of avarice. It then occurred to someone to dig in the roads for specks of the precious metal which might have been melted by the fire and left in the ruins.

Presently the roadway was full of diggers, some of whom earned as much as 80,000 marks a day by selling the platinum specks they unearthed.

The owners of the bulb factory tore down the new building they had erected, and, by searching in the ruins of the old, found enough platinum to pay a handsome profit in addition.

ELECTION MONDAY

Minnesota Will Choose Her Senator at Special Election July 16th. Republicans Be Sure To Vote.

J. A. O. Preus Has Wonderful Record of Achievement. Will Be Strong at Washington.

The special election to choose Minnesota's next Senator in Congress will be held Monday, July 16th. Every voter in Minnesota should cast his ballot and thus effectively register his preference. Of the candidates J. A. O. Preus, Minnesota's young Governor, is by far the best known and best qualified.

He has very unusual natural ability. Blessed by the Creator with superior mental capacity, a clear, keen mind and an active brain, he has the added advantage of a splendid education and years of political experience.

Mr. Preus' father was a Lutheran clergyman and college president, his mother a wonderful Christian woman. During his entire official life his private conduct and official acts have reflected credit upon the character and teachings of his parents.

Immediately after leaving the State University he went to Washington as a clerk in the Senate and is familiar with the personnel of that body, its method of conducting business and the various departments of the Federal Government. No other candidate for Senator has such education, such training or such knowledge.

While the Governor is a young man with a very unusual expectancy of life, in point of service he is one of the oldest of Minnesota's public men. After serving in Washington as Senate Clerk, he entered the practice of law in Minnesota but was shortly appointed Executive Clerk to the Governor, was then made Insurance Commissioner, elected State Auditor twice and twice elected Governor. During the twelve years that have passed, he has familiarized himself with all parts of Minnesota, with the industries, the problems and the needs of these various parts. No other candidate for the office of Senator has his statewide acquaintance with the industries and the problems of our great State.

His record in office speaks more eloquently for his ability and ideals than any eulogy. He is the State's greatest exponent of the merits of cooperative marketing. He believes in reduced taxes and during his term as Governor, for the only times in Minnesota's history, the general revenue tax levy has been twice omitted.

He believes in lightening the tax burden by taxing other sources of state income. He also believes in keeping his campaign pledges. Hence, when the tonnage tax bill was passed by the 1921 Legislature, he immediately signed the bill.

At the present time, he is the greatest exponent of the St. Lawrence waterway, holding official position in American public life. He can do more to secure the waterway, increase the markets available to Minnesota's farmers, and decrease the transportation rates upon their wheat than any man whom the Northwest can send to the U. S. Senate.

There can be no question about his ability, his experience, his fitness or his record. The Republican Party selected him as its candidate. To send him to Washington, votes are necessary. A Republican ballot which does not reach the ballot box is of no avail. If you believe in the destiny of Minnesota, believe in sending to represent us the ablest man whom we can secure, if you believe in the Republican Party and its principles, go to the polls on July 16th and vote for Minnesota's Governor, J. A. O. Preus for the U. S. Senate. Tell your friends to vote. Write or telephone all your relatives.

The State and the party need you. You owe it to yourself to vote.

Great Northern Pays

Tribute To Loyal Employes

Justice to the rank and file of earnest and loyal workers in railroad service calls for the correction of an impression created in some quarters by radical leaders that the employes are seeking to destroy the railroads by inefficient and disloyal service. It is true that a comparatively small number of union leaders are seeking to cause a breakdown of the railroads under private operation with a view to bringing about Government ownership. We believe that there remains today among the great majority of railroad workers the same fine sense of loyalty and honor towards the companies that has always characterized their service. That this is particularly true of the Great Northern is evidenced by the following resolutions unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Great Northern Veterans' Association on June, 22, 1923:

WHEREAS, from various sources it has been learned that the financial affairs of the railroads in the Northwest are insufficient to sustain a satisfactory financial condition; that much of the difficulty is due to high operating costs on account, among other things, of the present high prices of fuel and other supplies, and the rapid increase of late years in taxation, and

WHEREAS, it is most important to the employe to know that

His wages will be fair,

That he will be promptly and properly paid, when due, for services rendered,

That he is secure in his employment,

That his conditions of employment are good,

all of which depend upon the financial stability of the railroad, and

WHEREAS, in some quarters there is propaganda which tends toward the Government ownership of railroads to secure which the railroad employes are exhorted to assist in bringing about that result by hampering the management through failure to give a full day's work for a full day's pay, and

WHEREAS, we believe it would be dishonorable and also destructive to the interests of the employe for him to adopt a policy of not giving a full and efficient day's work for a full day's pay.

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that we condemn all propaganda designed to bring about any such policy as being dishonorable and destructive and that we trust and believe the Great Northern employes will not permit themselves to be led into such an unworthy and futile course.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that for ourselves we believe it is right and also clearly in our interest to support the management in its efforts to provide adequate and prompt service to the public and we pledge ourselves to do our full part in promoting cordial understanding and cooperative spirit in all matters of mutual interest between the Company and its employes.

The spirit of enthusiastic loyalty shown by these Veterans of 25 years or more of service with the Great Northern is the spirit that prevails among its 30,000 employes.

He found it in Valparaiso

Then he headed north and found it up near the "jumping-off place"

No matter what part of the world you may find yourself in, few things make you feel more at home than to walk into a store and discover your favorite smoking tobacco for sale.

You get a great thrill from seeing your home newspaper in a strange land and an even greater thrill on meeting someone from the old home town. But tobacco certainly comes next in the order of importance in away-from-home thrills.

With your favorite tobacco in your favorite pipe, life is worth living in almost any corner of the globe.

This thought was inspired by the following interesting letter from Mr. W. E. Bromley, an Edgeworth smoker from Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Larus & Brother Co.
Richmond, Va.
Gentlemen:

In some of your advertisements from time to time I have noticed letters from different users of Edgeworth Smoking Tobacco and I wondered if anyone ever had a more varied experience than I have had.

When in Valparaiso, South America, I could get it; and when I was as far north as a man could well go without going to the "jumping-off place," I could get Edgeworth Ready-Rubbed.

I have an old briar that I have had for ten years and it never had a crumb of any but Edgeworth in it.

If that isn't going some, "you tell me."

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. E. Bromley.

If Mr. Bromley makes frequent skips from continent to continent, his record of keeping all tobacco but Edgeworth out of his briar is indeed noteworthy.

Although Edgeworth does reach the far corners of the earth, there must be times when the supply runs low in Zanzibar and other remote districts.

But as a rule Edgeworth smokers, wherever they are, generally manage to find a way to get Edgeworth, for they don't feel as if they are really smoking unless the tobacco comes from a little blue can.

If you are not an Edgeworth smoker but would like an opportunity to find out if you want to be one, send your name and address to Larus & Brother Company, 73 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va.

You will receive almost immediately free samples of both Edgeworth Plug Slice and Ready-Rubbed. Then you can judge for yourself what you think about this tobacco that so many smokers claim gives complete pipe-satisfaction.

If you will include the name and address of your regular tobacco dealer with your request for the free samples, your courtesy will be appreciated.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"JEAN!"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups.

CHAPTER IV

—5—

The Old Sea-Rovers Awaken.

At midnight Captain Sazarac turned from the rue de la Levee to the broad pavement that skirted the Place d'Armes, and, for a moment, contemplated the changes which even the few years of the American occupation had wrought in the Paris of the New world. A painted iron palisade with ornate grill gates enclosed the square before the cathedral which he had known as a dusty parade-ground over which lazily flapped, now one, now the other—the royal standard of Spain or the fleur-de-lis of France. A portion of the ancient wooden gallows still remained, but about it, now, the children played of mornings, listening to the fearsome tales of Bras Coupe, the terror of the swamps, who preyed on human flesh and was proof to musket balls, as the colored nurses had it.

In the narrow way between the cathedral and the old Spanish calaboza the exile paused again. Documents of court and avocat were tacked to the wooden doors. Not so many years agone had not he—Jean Lafitte—sent his men up from the pirates' fortified refuge on Grand Terre island to bribe for the escape of his brother, Pierre, from this same prison? And time and again had they not both laughed to read, on these same boards, the city's proclamation for their capture—the law's futile fury when no man durst lay hand upon them, so completely did the Grand Terre adventurers awe the town?

"How many changes!" mused the wayfarer. "Hailed by the city as a hero, pardoned by the President and acclaimed for service to the new republic—denounced again and driven from the seas! Yet I walked these streets when no merchant was too proud to traffic for the goods we brought from the gulf privateering. And again the good sea calls—again, again!"

At a small door in a high wall of the rue St. Peter, he tapped with his sword hilt. It opened; he stood within the small garden of the Cafe la Veau Qui Tete. A dim light showed the wine tuns in the warehouse shadows.

Old Dominique, the worthy alderman, lifted a huge pewter mug in greeting. Half a dozen figures arose with smothered exclamations. They were about him, clasping his hands, whispering joyously.

"Thou—Captain Jean!" came a hoarse voice in the old patois of the coast islands. "Here are we all—ghosts, indeed, out of old days!"

"Johanness! Old brawler of the ports! I heard they had hanged you for the loot of the Santa off Grand Isle."

The huge seaman laughed his joy. "And thou! That the British sank thee off Galveston! Hang me? Ah, no!—the President's pardon, Jean! I—shame to say—peddle ducks and deer in the city markets. The very children point me out and put their fingers to their noses: 'Old Tete John,' they call me—I, who sailed with thee!"

"Better for you all than swinging at yardarms. Here is the worthy alderman; Beluche, with a lawful commission; Nez Coupe, still a fugitive in the deep swamp, I am told. And here, Monsieur de Almonaster!"

"Eh, well—" grunted Johanness. "Dominique brought the gentleman. D—n gentry, say I. Dominique fears to whistle lest it hurt his politics."

"We are, indeed, respectable," smiled the captain. "Only last year, I am told, my brother, Pierre, now a planter of St. James, was second to Monsieur St. Geme in a duel—that is getting into society indeed, gentlemen!"

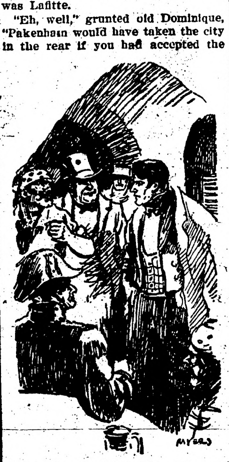
"Peuf!" grunted Dominique. "Four inches off my belly and I'd be at sea again. Only today I argued with the mayor, Roulffignac, that the city was better off when it fattened on the privateering. Was it not equal robbery when the Americans under Commodore Patterson looted our Grand Terre warehouses?"

"We should have fought instead of scuttling out—" grumbled Johanness. "The Yankees could not have taken us by storm. Glad they were later to have our fellows aid them. Who did General Jackson turn to but Captain Jean's skilled artillerymen when the British threatened the city? Bah! I never saw such a lame lot of dogs as our fellows were the day the pompous governor announced we were all recommended for a pardon! We stood dangling our cutlasses, listening to lawyers' speeches praising us for saving the city, when we should have been to sea again. Captain Jean, thou wert the only wise one of the band—departing to the Texas country and seizing Galveston island against the Spaniards. I could curse my heart that I did not enlist again with thee!"

"I intended to have the new establishment legitimate enough," murmured Lafitte, "but after the war the politicians lost no chance at Washington, nor with the Spanish viceroy at Vera Cruz, to poison all minds against me. When they sacked Galveston, I took young Bowie and went inland to the Santa Fe. That was my history since, comrades. I came back from the West, drawn by I know not what to tread these streets again."

The old buccaneers watched his calm face in the moonlight. He had taken off the hat and peruke; a bronzed handsome man with dark eyes tinged with melancholy—such was Lafitte.

"Eh, well," grunted old Dominique, "Pakenham would have taken the city in the rear if you had accepted the bribes the British offered you at Barataria. And in turn what have the Yankees done for you, Jean—scattered your fortune to the winds!"



"Aye, You Enriched This City, and You Stand a Fugitive Upon Its Streets!"

"Aye, you enriched this city, and you stand a fugitive upon its streets!"

The captain raised his hand gravely: "I—am a citizen of the United States, gentlemen. Proscribed, just now, it is true—but—it might be I could serve again. There are curious things reported in the Mexicoes. Colonel Travis, I recall, and Crockett—and young Bowie were hot for me to join the Texans in a new republic. And in Kentucky—"

"Ah, but, my captain," growled old Johanness, "what hast thou to do with their miserable politics of the day? The sea for us! D—d be this gabble of the town! Look you, what it has made of Dominique!—sitting, twiddling his thumbs on his fat belly! And Beluche—taking off and putting on his gilt chapeau, ticklishly, as if fearing to get dust on his gewgaws!"

"Cease your spewing," growled the Cartagenian, "I sail with proper commissions, I would have you know, from Colombia."

"And be d—d with your papers!" roared the old man. "Admiral? There does not live one for me!—nor councilors, nor nobility—young sprigs of dandies coming to pat our hard salted fists!"

He glared about, his gaze lingering on Count de Almonaster.

"Old man," said Raoul quietly, "you had better keep your place."

"D—n!"

The old sea dog was starting up; Lafitte laughingly laid hands upon him.

"Sit down, old tar-ears! I shall beg pardon for you. I know—I know! Old days—old ways—it is hard to put things by." He put his hand affectionately on Johanness' shoulder. "Do you remember the time I sent you with the eight-oared barge to conduct Mr. Grymes back to the city—after the feasting, roaring week at Grand Terre?"

"Aye," interrupted Beluche, "the famous attorney who defended you and Pierre in the first indictment they issued against you for piracy!"

"And you sent word, captain, that if the lawyers wished their fee they must come fetch it from our fort at Grand Terre. The city wagered that Grymes would never return alive, but do you recall the week he ventured? The feasting, dancing, the drinking until the skies rocked, all in our guest's honor!"

"Aye, and me—" Johanness beat his hairy chest: "I, the bo'sun, it was, to whom Captain Jean intrusted the lawyer on the return. By the river we came, eight armed fellows pulling the barge and roaring chanties! At every plantation wharf we stopped, the advocate breaking bottles of the finest vintages o' Spain and shouting greetings. And on the deck, piled in the sun, forty thousand dollars in gold where all might see! Every gentleman's house from English Turn to the city gate must be routed out that Mr. Grymes could gamble against his hosts, so that, when our villains finally haled him into town, not a dollar did he have left of all his fee. E-oh!—even now they talk of it! Not in all Louisiana such princely hospitality as the famous attorney found in the house of Lafitte, the pirate!"

"Old man," smiled the leader, "I never liked that word!"

"I know. That is all I ever held against you, Jean! I recall the day you shot Cambio through the heart for boasting of a bit o' blood he let. You were ever a bit finicky for some o' our fo'cas'le scum, but I swear they loved you, Jean!"

The adventurer looked at the grim faces about the table. The silent Beluche, the complacent Dominique, the hairy bo'sun; and then the slender elegance of the Count de Almonaster. And to him he spoke gravely.

"You are hearing much, young sir. The city sleeping, and these old comrades creeping by stealth to greet me here."

"I've heard the old tales. I've dreamed—" he laughed slightly. "These are dull days. The gallants of the town at their ecarte, or projecting some gentleman's masquerade, or dancing attendance at the opera. They boast of making a little Paris of New Orleans; but who, Monsieur, wishes a little Paris after knowing the big one?"

"Your modesty, sir, is refreshing, after these town gallants who make one trip to the Oaks, receive a rapier tip in the arm, and the rest of their days deem themselves bravos who have the ladies in a flutter."

"I have been twice abroad," said Raoul. "I saw a bit of pistoling in the Indies during the blacks' revolt. And there, among a shipload of refugees, I met the affair that sobered me—made a man of the boy, Monsieur!"

"A woman," smiled Sazarac.

"A child. I fought for her in the flames of her father's house. When I lay wounded they sent her away, orphaned, in the ship captain's charge." He laughed: "That is all—a trifle of adventuring to Jean Lafitte!"

"Bah!" growled Johanness, putting back his long gray hair: "Women!" Then, seeing the figure on the bench that had snored the hour through, he forthwith kicked this hard couch from under it. An uncouth disheveled man struck the stones, rolled over and cursed them all.

"Jarvis!" growled the bo'sun. "He has seen more than you, Monsieur de Almonaster, and he has never handled a pistol in his life!"

"Jarvis?" Sazarac started back. "You did not tell me!"

"He is utterly drunk. We did not dare tell him in a public place because of his clattering tongue. Ho, Jarvis! At the drink again!"

The profligate staggered up, rubbing his eyes. "D—n! Old rumheads, mulling away of Barataria days! Of Jean again—" He broke off staring: "Do I dream—still in the liquor!"

"It is I, Jarvis. Come, clear your eyes!"

Jarvis reeled forth. "Jean, whom I painted at the famous isle! Jean!"

"Not so loud," grunted Dominique. "I hear the watchman whingwhanging down the street."

"Jean!" The two friends were greeting fondly. "Jean! I knew you lived. Jean of the Petral—my hand upon him!"

"And what have you done with your genius, lad?"

"I have learned to drink," retorted Jarvis, "drink and debt. Into jail and out again. Betimes I belabor Dominique for a dollar. He gives it with fatherly advice, and hales me to Pere Antoine for reformation. Between the alderman and the priest I am utterly lost."

"A pity," murmured De Almonaster. "The best families would befriend him, but he is oftener in the gutter than elsewhere."

"This week the sensation is choosing the crew to man the Napoleon ship."

MINN. VOTERS ELECT JOHNSON

Farmer-Labor Candidate for U. S. Senator Conceded Victory by Gov. Preus.

IS LAFOLLETTE VICTORY

Johnson's Lead Increasing Steadily as Votes Come in—New Senator Says He Is Going Back to the Farm.

St. Paul.—Johnson had a lead of 26,588 votes when tabulations of returns had been completed from 1,729 of the state's 3,520 precincts, the count standing: Johnson 169,521; Preus, 142,933; Carley, 13,620.

St. Paul.—Magnus Johnson, a practical farmer of Kimbal, Minn., was elected United States senator from Minnesota, in succession to the late Knute Nelson. Johnson is a Farmer-Laborite and a follower of Robert M. LaFollette.

Johnson's plurality probably will exceed 40,000, early returns indicated, with Governor J. A. O. Preus, Republican, in second place, and James A. Carley, Democrat, trailing far behind. Preus had announced his intention to support the Harding administration.

When 1,640 of the state's 3,520 precincts had reported, Johnson had a lead of 24,764 over Governor Preus, the count standing: Johnson, 161,503; Preus, 136,739; and Carley, 11,424. This vote—309,066—was believed to represent about three-fifths of the total cast.

Election of Magnus Johnson was conceded by Governor J. A. O. Preus, Republican, his principal opponent, in a brief statement.

Governor Preus conceded the election after he had been told that 1,110 of the state's 3,520 precincts gave Johnson a lead of 18,000, the count showing Johnson, 107,973; Preus, 89,499; and James A. Carley, 8,375.

These 1,110 precincts, representing incomplete returns from 70 of the state's 87 counties, showed a vote totaling 305,847, as against a probable total vote of from 450,000 to 550,000. If Johnson maintains his present ratio his plurality will exceed 40,000.

Preus Thanks Supporters.

Governor Preus, in conceding Johnson's elction, made only a brief statement, "thanking those who labored so earnestly and unselfishly for my election." He said he might issue a longer statement later.

Johnson said he was going back to his farm to help his sons get in the rest of the hay and finish the harvest before he pays any more attention to politics or affairs of state.

The senator-elect was jubilant when informed that he had won. His first statement was: "I beat that fellow? I am United States senator? What do you think of that?"

LAUSANNE FACTIONS AGREE

Lausanne.—An agreement has been reached on all the outstanding difficulties in the Near East conference, and nothing remains in the way of peace.

Ismet Pasha, head of the Turkish delegation, and the allied delegates discussed for several hours the question of concessions and evacuation by foreign troops of Turkish soil, and when the sessions were resumed, the atmosphere was electrical, recalling the night of February 4 when Lord Curzon, in accordance with his ultimatum, left for London and the first peace conference collapsed.

The delegates representing the great powers prepared bravely to encounter the Turks when they met the second time. One of them summarized the situation in his remark: "Little by little by terrible tenacity these Turks get more out of us, and now they have reopened things we dreamed were already settled. We will try to end it, but who can tell?"

Ismet Pasha looked worn and weary for he has been pulled this way and that by Joseph C. Grew, the American representative, and the allied delegates, the former insisting that he keep the Turkish petroleum concessions out of the treaty, and the latter resisting any change.

Grew conferred with Ismet seven separate times in two days, urging him to resist confirming the great oil contract in the treaty.

According to information issued before the meeting, the allied experts agreed to drop insistence on preferential right for British and French companies for future concessions. This, if ratified, is a victory for the American contentions that such preferences are monopolistic and violate the open door principle.

Ring Identifies Aviator.

Chicago.—A high school ring found in the charred remnants of an American airplane shot down near Bauiny, France, in 1918, was believed by Paul Welch to have established the identity of the aviator after a five year's search. Welch, who saw a picture of the ring bearing the inscription of "M. H. S., 1910" in an American Legion magazine, said he was sure the ring belonged to John Barry, 30, of Mitchell, S. D., and that the inscription was for Mitchell High School. Welch said he has an exact duplicate.

MRS. HICKEY SO WEAK COULD HARDLY STAND

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health

Worcester, Mass. — "I had some trouble caused by a female weakness and got so run-down and weak from it that I could hardly stand or walk across the floor. The doctor gave me all kinds of pills, but nothing helped me. I happened to meet a friend who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I thought I would try it. After taking it a week I began to improve, and now I feel fine and am doing all of my housework, including washing, sewing and house cleaning. I have recommended your medicine to my friends, and I am willing for you to use this letter as a testimonial, as I would like to help any one suffering the way I did from such a weakness."—Mrs. DELIA HICKEY, 4 S. Ludlow St., Worcester, Mass.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. This book contains valuable information.

American Advertises for Thrill.

The other afternoon a young American rented an airplane at the Bourget field which he will utilize, he declares, to scatter handbills all over Paris says Le Petit Parisien. A sample of these handbills reads as follows:

"An American, for the first time in Paris, would like to lunch at noon next Tuesday with the most interesting anarchist in the capital; Wednesday, with a graduate student of art or music; Thursday, with an actress; Friday, with some lady who intends to commit suicide, and Saturday, with a nobleman.

"In exchange for this entertainment he offers the luncheons, music and intelligent conversation."

The address of an American advertising agency follows, and then the name of this original visitor—Lionel P. Tompkins.

Betty Knew.

Betty had her little brother out playing with her. He fell down, and while he wasn't really hurt he set up a lusty yelling.

"Why don't you pick Bobby up and comfort him?" I asked Betty.

"Oh, he isn't hurt," she said, "'cause he is just crying with his holler and not his tears."—Exchange.

The Situation.

A reformer who wasn't working at it any more was asked the wherefore. His reply was brief.

"Anybody who is not reformed now is hopeless."

Summer Find You Miserable?

It's hard to do one's work when every day brings morning lameness, throbbing backache, and a dull, tired feeling. If you suffer thus, why not find out the cause? Likely it's your kidneys. Headaches, dizziness and bladder irregularities may give further proof that your kidneys need help. Don't risk neglect! Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands have been helped by Doan's. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

A North Dakota Case

J. M. Russell, Canto, N. D., says: "My back ached and pained something fierce. When I stooped I could hardly straighten, my back was so lame. The kidney secretions passed too freely and were highly colored. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and found them a good reliable remedy for they always gave relief when I needed them."

The Young Philosopher.

A young philosopher was employed in one of the stores at a salary of $6.50 per week. He told his employer one morning that he was going to leave, having found a better place.

"A better place?" echoed his employer. "What wages are you to get?"

"Six dollars a week."

"But that is not as much as you get here."

"No," said the boy, "but then it's better to do less and get so much than to do more and not get enough."

Fashion in Clocks.

Not so long ago the bride was apt to receive ten or twelve clocks among her wedding presents. These were of the large kind adapted to the "parlor" mantel. People needed clocks more in those days than they do now in this day of wrist watches, yet clocks are still needed, but most of them are small and practically noiseless. Such clocks fill a real need on the dressing table, or a desk. The simpler ones are always in demand in the kitchen.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Montevideo—The 12 women's clubs of Montevideo have pledged their support to the guarantors of Montevideo's 1924 chautauqua.

St. Cloud—Everything of a gambling nature from paddle wheels to throwing rings over pearl handled revolvers was closed up at a traveling show by St. Cloud police.

Clara City—Men and women members of the Minnesota Seventh District Editorial association held their annual informal summer outing at the summer home of C. Burgess, editor of the Clara City Herald, at Green Lake.

Duluth—Nearly 150 men and women from Duluth and towns throughout northern Minnesota have faced Federal Judge William A. Cant on liquor charges in 24 hours. On this number only 22 pleaded guilty.

Thief River Falls—The flowage of water in the Red Lake river is gradually lessening and hardly enough is going over the dam to furnish power for the city in addition to that required by the flour mill which has prior rights.

Windom—At the annual meeting of the Co-operative Elevator company, held here, a dividend of 7 per cent was declared. Each patron was paid a rebate of 1 per cent on all grain marketed in the last year, and the sum of $3,000 was ordered placed in the company's sinking fund.

Madison—The agricultural experiment station of the University of Minnesota, co-operating with the bureau of soils of the United States Department of Agriculture, has begun a soil survey of Lac Qui Parle county and a party of soil experts arrived here to start the work.

Hibbing—Two hundred and fifty Knights of Columbus from Duluth, Superior, Minneapolis and range towns gathered here to initiate a class of 43. The initiation at the McGruick was given in the afternoon, and in the evening the visitors attended a banquet at a local hotel.

New Ulm—The Catholic Church of St. Mary was dedicated here, thousands of persons participating in the exercises. Rev. Austin Dowling, archbishop of St. Paul, performed the dedicatory rites, assisted by more than thirty local and visiting clergy. The archbishop also delivered the dedicatory address.

Stillwater—The body of Helen Pretzel, eight-year-old, who was drowned in Lake St. Croix with her brother Emil, 11 years old, was recovered here by Fisherman John Jeremy, an Indian. Jeremy arrived here to look for the bodies after continuous dragging for three days had failed to locate them. Search is being continued for the body of Emil.

Olivia—The bravery of Henry G. Schwer a farmer, living near here, in the battle of Bells Court, France, in the World war has just been recognized by the United States government. Schwer has received a distinguished service cross from the war department. Some time ago the English government recognized Schwer's work in France by sending him a medal of bravery.

Duluth—Heavy coal receipts in the Duluth Superior harbor in the first three months of navigation indicate a more plentiful fuel supply for the northwest this year than last, despite late opening of navigation. With five months of navigation in prospect, this year's soft and hard coal receipts so far are 69 per cent of the 1922 total and 39 per cent of the 1921 total, which was the largest since 1918.

Fairmont—State Game and Fish Commissioner Carlos Avery has given City Engineer Frank O. Jones instructions to rush plans for deepening and enlarging the channels between Lake Sissetom and Budd, Budd and Hall, Hall and Amber, in this county, and also to clear the channel between South Silver lake and Iowa lake. The state treasury has profited, it is estimated, more than $100,000 from rough fish sold from these lakes.

Hibbing—Fame of the local high school, one of the finest in the country, has spread beyond confines of Minnesota. Since tourist travel began several hundred people have visited the school, among them many men and women engaged in school work in the United States and Canada, some from California and others from the Atlantic coast.

Brainerd—One of the richest touring parties in the history of the local tourist park stopped here. They number 30 men, women and children of the Osage Indian tribe in Oklahoma and Kansas, of whom eight boast an annual income of $15,000 each from oil wells. Five of the highest priced automobiles on the market transported these Indians, and two large trucks carried their tents, cooking equipment and belongings.

Hibbing—The Disabled War Veterans' post here has been given $250 by the Four-Minute-Men, an organization which served during the World war. The money is left from the fund raised after the war to take care of returned soldiers.

Owatonna—The Steele county commissioners' meeting here voted to levy $14,000 from the tax for the proposed sanatorium to be built jointly by Steele, Freeborn and Faribault counties. Two commissioners from each of the three counties will select a site for the sanatorium, as soon as adequate funds have been raised.

Winona—Reduction of $34,000 in the tax levy for Winona county funds for the year 1924 has been announced by the county board. The new levy is $247,000.

Winona—Seventy lawyers, including several members of the Minnesota Supreme court, attended the convention of the Southeastern Minnesota Bar association here.

Moorhead—Paving bonds totalling $50,000 were sold by the city of Moorhead. The bids were very low he said, the terms being 5 per cent interest and $275 legal expenses.

Granite Falls—Sever Olson has the record for the big fish catch of the season here. Olson, fishing with a cane pole in the Minnesota river, caught a 16 pound catfish.

Sturgeon Lake—Ernest MacKale, aged 23, and A. M. Cunningham, Jr., aged 17, were drowned here, when a boat in which they were fishing capsized. The bodies were recovered.

Winona—Miss Sarah Lowrey of Granite Falls, was appointed executive secretary of the Winona county child welfare board, succeeding Miss Caroline Forster of Minneapolis, resigned.

Winona—The 8 month old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Whalen, living near Caledonia, was strangled to death by falling between the iron rails and a spring of the bed on which he and his twin brother were lying.

Luverne—The Rev. W. W. Fowler, pioneer missionary of Minnesota and the Dakotas and rector of the Episcopal church here for a number of years, died at his home after a prolonged illness. He was 80 years old.

Chisholm—The special election called for the voting upon the question of $600,000 bond issue will be conducted here July 28. The money is to be used in refunding the outstanding indebtedness of the municipality.

Northrop—Fifteen hundred persons attended the Northrop Co-operative Creamery outing. Northrop businessmen and members of the Waverly and Westford Farmers' clubs attended, as did delegations from many towns in this section.

Red Lake Falls—Red Lake county is asking $105,000 in loans from the Minnesota rural credits bureau. Twelve applications have been sent in from this county on a total of 2,846 acres, or an average of 237 acres to the application.

Fairmont—Delegations from Sioux Falls, Jackson, Luverne and Fairmont met here to consider ways and means of bringing the new Atlantic-Yellowstone-Pacific highway through southern Minnesota on State Road No. 9. Sioux Falls has raised $38,000 to help put it through.

Worthington—Because they have failed to comply with state laws regulating rural schools, nine school districts in Nobles county will lose $150 each this year. One school had neglected to fly the stars and stripes; another had poor facilities for drinking water and the others have inadequate buildings.

Windom — Farmyard watering troughs have claimed two little children as victims by drowning in the last few days. On a farm near Wilmont a little year and one-half old son of Henry Sieve fell into the watering trough and was dead when found. Near Springfield, a 2 year old son of Fred C. Bolfany was drowned in a similar manner.

Minneapolis—Many babies in Minnesota have a better chance to live and grow strong with the taking effect of the "filled milk" law passed by the last legislature. The law prohibits the manufacture or sale in Minnesota of milk or cream from which the butterfat is taken and another oil or fat substituted.

Waseca—In a special mayoralty election here, William C. Johnston, president of the city council, defeated Dr. F. A. Swartwood, incumbent, 697 to 568 votes. Dr. Swartwood was defeated by 26 votes at the spring election by George Goodspeed, but brought action charging violation of the corrupt practises act by followers of Goodspeed, and in district court Judge W. C. Dean held that the act had been violated, thus voiding the election.

Minneapolis—The Dakota league, with its four-town organization, decided at a meeting in Minneapolis to finish out the season even though some of the clubs have run into financial difficulties of late. The presidents of the four clubs meeting with President Mike Cantillon here, assured the league head that their backers would finance their clubs for the rest of the season no matter what the attendance is. With that assurance from the club heads, all talk of closing up the league at this early stage was abandoned.

Duluth—From all parts of the northwest and as far east of Philadelphia and as far west as Montana, letters are coming to the Duluth land office inquiring about the tracts of public lands which recently were thrown open to homestead entry by the department of interior. Former service men mentioned in the original announcement as preferable to the general public, are flooding Robert E. Patterson, register of the land office with requests for detailed information about the land.

Chisholm—A mowing machine cut both legs off the 2 year old son of E. Nusich, a farmer living five miles north of this city. One leg was cut off half way to the knee, while the other was cut through the ankle joints. According to physicians, the boy will live.

Madison — That several hundred acres of fine grain were destroyed by the hailstorm west and northwest of Madison, is indicated by reports that are being received at local insurance agencies. In most cases the losses are estimated at from 30 to 50 per cent.

INCOME TAX WORK COSTLY

Collection for Each Fiscal Year Have Cost $1.30 for Each $100 Paid to Government.

To handle efficiently the collection of income taxes among one hundred million people is a problem that cannot be worked out overnight, but now after nine years a comparatively smooth-running, well-organized machine has been developed.

The internal revenue bureau in Washington annually receives one and a quarter million income tax returns. This figure does not include the returns filed by those whose incomes are less than $5,000. To audit and carry on the work of this department of the bureau, 7,275 persons were employed in Washington during the last fiscal year.

The cost of administering the internal revenue laws was $41,577,374.40. Total receipts were $3,197,451,083. Computing on this basis the cost of collection was $1.30 for each $100 collected, compared with 87 cents for the preceding year. The difference in relative cost of collection is due mainly to the large reduction in revenues, the repeal of some of the war profits taxes, and the increase in individual exemption.—Saturday Evening Post.

DIVERSIONS OF THE ROMANS

Sporting Men Used Quail as Well as Cocks for Popular Combats in the Arena.

The Romans used quails as well as cocks for fighting. Quail combats were well known among the ancients, and especially at Athens. The Chinese have been always extremely fond of quail-fighting, as appears from many accounts of those people. The Sumatrians likewise use the birds in the manner of gamecocks.

Cocks and quail, fitted for the purpose of engaging one another to the last gasp for diversion are frequently compared by the Roman writers to gladiators, remarks the Detroit News. A circle was made in which the birds were placed, and he whose quail was driven out of the circle lost the stake, which was sometimes money and occasionally the quails themselves. Another practice was to produce one of the birds, which being first filliped with the middle finger, a feather was then plucked from its head. If the quail bore this operation without flinching his master gained the stake, but lost it if the bird ran away.

Illuminated Gloves.

A novel illuminated gauntlet glove, for motorists and traffic controllers has been invented. On the back of the glove are two electric lamps one red, the other white. The red light is used by motorists when turning or stopping, and the white light is used for inspection, reading signposts, or maps. The battery is carried in a small pocket on the outside of the gauntlet. On the inside of the thumb and two fingers are small metal contact points, and to light the lamps one simply closes the finger on the thumb.

CARRIES ITS SUPPLY OF OIL

Fish Equipped by Nature for Swift Race It Has to Make Up Cold Yukon Waters.

A fish equipped with a special oil supply for a swift race up the cold Yukon river has been reported by Dr. C. H. Gilbert to the United States bureau of fisheries. The reason why this fish has this special oil supply is that it must maintain a speed from three to five times that of the salmon in other rivers, due to the fact that the season is very short, and that the spawning grounds are between 2,000 and 3,000 miles from the mouth of the river.

The Yukon "chum," a fish of lowlier degree, is similarly supplied with a special store of oil. Known generally as a species that spawns exclusively in the lower courses of streams, often scarcely above the reach of the tides and never far from salt water, in the Yukon it shows a remarkable reversal of habit, and under the spur of necessity rushes up the river 2,000 miles or more to the spawning grounds at a speed averaging 50 miles a day.

Carrying the Load.

The recent publicity given co-eds at the university has caused quite a lot of apparently "tongue-twisted" comments from the co-eds themselves. For instance, in substance, the following is a conversation between two of the fair damsels:

"Well, what do you think of the scandal that they are shooting at us about petting parties?"

Other co-ed: "I have passed it up as a huge joke."

"Why, sure; that's all it is. Why should they accuse all of them by actions of a few of us?"—Columbus Dispatch.

Bad Case.

Miss Catt—Matrimony must have gone to her head.

Miss Nipp—Without a doubt. She's still living with her husband.

OVER $7500.00 to HOUSEWIVES for Recipes!

WE will buy not less than 101 Recipes or suggestions for new uses of Grape-Nuts, paying $50.00 for each one accepted.

And in addition—

Good Housekeeping Institute, conducted by Good Housekeeping Magazine, will decide an award of $2500.00 for the best four of the 101 new Grape-Nuts Recipes, so purchased:

$1,000.00 for the 1st selection
$750.00 for the 2nd selection
$500.00 for the 3rd selection
$250.00 for the 4th selection

The conditions of this remarkable offer are so simple and fair that every housewife in the United States has an opportunity to share in its benefits.

There Is No Other Food Like Grape-Nuts

Practically everybody knows Grape-Nuts as a delicious, nourishing breakfast food. And while it is common knowledge that Grape-Nuts with milk or cream is a complete food, many housewives do not know of the appetizing and economical dishes that can be prepared with Grape-Nuts.

Grape-Nuts lends itself, we believe, to more uses than any other cereal.

Thousands of women are finding varied uses for Grape-Nuts in their home cooking; and thousands of others would be glad to learn that Grape-Nuts adds distinctive flavor and nutritive qualities to a great variety of dishes.

So the thought back of our offer of over $7500.00 for Grape-Nuts Recipes is to bring out the new ways in which this wonderful food is adding to the health and pleasure of people everywhere.

Ask your grocer, or write to Dept. B, Postum Cereal Co., Inc., Battle Creek, Mich., for details of the offer of over $7500.00 for New Grape-Nuts Recipes, which must be mailed by August 31, 1923.

Sold by Grocers everywhere!

Great Northern Pays

Tribute To Loyal Employes

Justice to the rank and file of earnest and loyal workers in railroad service calls for the correction of an impression created in some quarters by radical leaders that the employes are seeking to destroy the railroads by inefficient and disloyal service. It is true that a comparatively small number of union leaders are seeking to cause a breakdown of the railroads under private operation with a view to bringing about Government ownership. We believe that there remains today among the great majority of railroad workers the same fine sense of loyalty and honor towards the companies that has always characterized their service. That this is particularly true of the Great Northern is evidenced by the following resolutions unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Great Northern Veterans Association on June, 22, 1923:

WHEREAS, from various sources it has been learned that the financial affairs of the railroads in the Northwest are insufficient to sustain a satisfactory financial condition; that much of the difficulty is due to high operating costs on account, among other things, of the present high prices of fuel and other supplies, and the rapid increase of late years in taxation, and

WHEREAS, it is most important to the employe to know that
His wages will be fair,
That he will be promptly and properly paid, when due, for services rendered,
That he is secure in his employment,
That his conditions of employment are good,
all of which depend upon the financial stability of the railroad, and

WHEREAS, in some quarters there is propaganda which tends toward the Government ownership of railroads to secure which the railroad employes are exhorted to assist in bringing about that result by hampering the management through failure to give a full day's work for a full day's pay, and

WHEREAS, we believe it would be dishonorable and also destructive to the interests of the employe for him to adopt a policy of not giving a full and efficient day's work for a full day's pay.

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that we condemn all propaganda designed to bring about any such policy as being dishonorable and destructive and that we trust and believe the Great Northern employes will not permit themselves to be led into such an unworthy and futile course.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that for ourselves we believe it is right and also clearly in our interest to support the management in its efforts to provide adequate and prompt service to the public and we pledge ourselves to do our full part in promoting cordial understanding and cooperative spirit in all matters of mutual interest between the Company and its employes.

The spirit of enthusiastic loyalty shown by these Veterans of 25 years or more of service with the Great Northern is the spirit that prevails among its 30,000 employes.

Mrs. Jacob Nelson who has been visiting relatives at Grand Forks and other points returned home Sunday accompanied by her son Edwin and family who visited here until the next day.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren autoed to Badger Sunday to visit relatives. They returned Monday morning with little Bernice who went up there last Thursday with Jesse Sorum, when he stopped off here on his way home from Crookston.

A car driven by Chris Norbeck ran off the grade south of John Simonson's Saturday night and was considerably smashed up. C. J. Dale, Bernard Larson and Herb Walker, who were also in the car, received some scratches but luckily were not much hurt. The lights and brakes both failed to work which caused the accident.

Fatally Injured

Isack Garfve was kicked and fatally hurt by his horses Tuesday afternoon as he entered their stall. Mr. Garfve forgot to speak to the horses and as one of them is blind, it became frightened and kicked, knocking him down and trampling on him. He somehow succeeded in crawling to the house despite his injuries. Mrs. Garfve and son were in town and another son was dragging the roads. On their reaching home, they sent for a physician who stated upon examination that Mr. Garfve was injured internally and gave them little hopes of his recovery. The injured man lingered until almost 12 o'clock Wednesday night before he passed away.

The relative were notified of the accident Wednesday morning, and early yesterday morning Mrs. Chas. Winnegge, Mrs. Leonard Olson, Mrs. Reber Dally, Ole and Inga Garfve all arrived from Devils Lake, N. D., only a couple of hours after their father had departed this life.

Another daughter, Mrs. Charles Horton of Voltaire, N. D. was expected to arrived home yesterday or to-day.

The funeral will be held at the home at two o'clock, Saturday afternoon, Rev. Myhrer officiating, and the remains will be placed beside those of a son, in the Folden cemetery, who died at the age of six years.

Isack William Garfve was born in Norway Feb. 15th., 1855 and was 68 years, 5 months and 10 days old when he entered upon the better life, where there is no pain nor sorrow. He was married in Norway to Miss Johanna Olson and came to America about 32 years ago, and his family came about a year later.

He homesteaded 80 acres in the same section where they live and later the forty where their home is now located.

The News joins their many friends in extending sincere sympathy to the grief stricken family.

The School Election

At the the annual school election held Saturday evening, all of the present members of the board, Messrs. Ellestead, Anderson and Holmgren, were elected by handsome majorities, receiving all but a few scattering votes. The several farmers and village people failed to attend, an even hundred votes were cast.

Following is the result of the vote for the two year terms: T. E. Ellestead 68, P. L. Anderson 76, G. Sanoden 10, R. J. Lund 15, S. H. Nohre 13, C. H. Gunheim 2.

For the one year term R. A. Holmgren received 76 votes, G. Sanoden 7, R. J. Lund 4, and S. H. Nohre 6.

Although the board has labored under some heavy handicaps the past year, they are about to enter upon the new year with bright prospects for the future.

The tax rate was reduced last year, but the board has over $6000, with which to start the new year. This is about $150 less than last years balance. They have a $2000 certificate of deposit in the bank drawing interest. They have received $99.31 interest the past year on bank deposits and a $3000 loan made for a few months.

Although there were only from a third to a half as many pupils from outside the district this year, as there were last year, the pay in advance system adopted by the board has brot in $95.70 the past year, which is almost as much as was ever collected under the old loose system of "Pay when you like."

Wonderful Results from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Beloit, Wis.—"My female trouble was brought on by overwork. I had worked in stores and had to do heavier work than my strength could stand, and had to be on my feet most of the time. Finally I had to give up this work entirely and stay at home. Doctor's medicine did not give me much relief, and my mother wanted me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took a couple of bottles of it and thought it did not help me as much as it should, so I gave it up to try something else. Nothing I took helped me much, so I finally decided to give the Vegetable Compound another trial and to take enough of it to make sure it would help me. I have taken it over a year now and it has brought wonderful results. I have gained from 93 to 110 pounds and am keeping house now. My friends all notice the change in my health. I will be glad to answer all letters that women write to me about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. W. G. MONSON, 1515 Park Ave., Beloit, Wis.

New Wave-Changer Switch.

A three-point wave-changer switch with locking attachment is now available for radio generators. The switch arm is so arranged that when it is moved across the face of the appliance it may be locked in either of three spring contacts. Each of these contacts gives the necessary connection for a different length of radio wave. By this method of securely fastening the arm in position on the contacts, there is no possibility of the arm jarring or vibrating out of place.

"THE PLOT NAPOLEON"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates.

—6—

"He would be at home anywhere—" Beluche watched the jester who had wandered back among the wine tuns searching for his pewter mug: "Do you recall how our rough fellows were amazed when we first tumbled him off a sacked merchantman down among us, and at once—with our pistols at his head—he began to bawl for drink? As I live, thereafter, on the Petral, he feared nothing save that the next prize might have more gold than liquor!"

"He did us all honor," mused Lafitte. "Eh, the old faces about me!"

Jarvis the youngest of them all, save Raoul, staggered to the table. "Piracy," he lamented, "ruined me! I was treated all too famously by the cutthroats. But, Jean—now, if we had a ship—eh, well! The drink this way!"

"Ah, the ship! It appears we have forgotten why we are here! The ship? We have a ship!"

"A ship?" growled a new voice. Nez Coupe, the small wiry Canary islander, with a face most frightfully disfigured by a saber cut, the most lawless of the former Grand Terre privateers, an outlaw still unpardoned, came to the table lamp. "What talk! Not one of us all could purchase a yawl boat!"

Beluche and Dominique fidgeted. Beluche gestured uneasily to the fastidious De Almonaster. It seemed he must speak; it was for that they had fetched him to the council.

"There is a ship appointed for a purpose," began the count, reservedly. "The Girod ship, fitted by the citizenry—for a certain purpose—"

"Bah! That Napoleon folly!" growled Johanness: "Child's play! Ah, but a ship for your eye, my captain!"

The grim grizzled faces looked from the captain to the youngest man.

"It is difficult to announce," continued Raoul. "But I have, this day, taken over my aunt's interest, and that of Monsieur Allain, in the Girod ship. I have, therefore, a word as to her. As you all know, the Napoleon venture is not a secret. The mayor, Rouiffignac, the Creole families of the city, are heartily in sympathy with it. I have been against it until—Monsieur Dominique proposed that we intrigue for Captain Sazarac to command."

There was a shout—derision, incredulity, protest. The wilder ones uprose feverishly. Dominique would have spoken, but Jarvis staggered up, cup in hand. "A toast! The plot! Ho, villains, all—to the plot!" And he roared the louder.

"The devil take you!" growled Beluche. "The watchman on the corner—"

Sazarac raised his hand. "I, to command? What madness again! The young blades of the town are to man the schooner—they would be spanked to bed if Lafitte was to be known among them!"

"We have thought powerful influence could be brought to bear for your pardon, Monsieur. A rare exploit to reinstate you—seizing the emperor from his prison isle!"

Sazarac laughed idly. "Quite impossible. Gentlemen, I beg you—"

"A ship!" shouted Johanness, as if, suddenly, to his old eyes had leaped the vision of far sea days: "The Seraphine! Jean, and a ship again! A ship shaken free in the gulf, and any flag will serve!"

"Silence, you fool!" gasped Dominique.

"Perdition with aldermen! Ho, you—Beluche, with the gilt gimcracks on your shoulders—what do you think? Jean on the quarter-deck, and you and I at the lookouts? Name o' G—d! One crack at the fat fleets, and then south across the line!"

"In the swamps off Point Le Garde," shouted Nez Coupe, "I can enlist a dozen overnight who once sailed with Jean and Pierre!"

"Hist!" lamented Dominique. "They can hear you to the levee! Let the young gentleman talk; then our captain will have it clearly. He shall be Sazarac until we are cleared, Captain Gaspar Sazarac with recommendations from the Americans of the West. Monsieur de Almonaster will vouch for Sazarac. I, myself, the alderman, have known this worthy Sazarac who is to be the secluded house guest of Monsieur de Almonaster, and introduced aright ere we broach the Napoleon matter—"

Jarvis suddenly thrust his drink-swollen face close to the lamp. He grinned with tipsy awakening. "Why, so—this Sazarac! Ho, Jean!—a woman! You are overnight in the town, and at once a woman!" He fumbled in his breast and brought out a crushed flower, and laid it down with a mock flourish. "Did you ever, Captain Gaspar Sazarac—smell camellias in the moonlight?"

Sazarac stood glancing from John Jarvis to the camellia upon the table. The jester was grinning knowingly. The Count de Almonaster turned a puzzled face upon them both.

"The affair of the English woman," grumbled Beluche. "Twaddle of the gossipers on the promenade. A drunken fool, and an evil jest! Sazarac need not challenge. The scandal is upon Carr and his two women."

But Jarvis continued to leer upon the leader's silent face. "I wish I could paint love in a woman's eye—" he mocked. "Then there should be a mistress with a camellia in her hair at my studio." He turned away to draw his measure of wine.

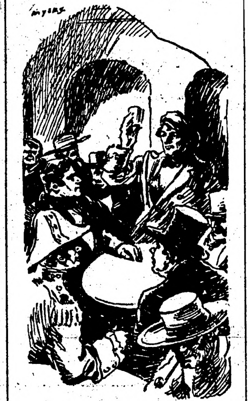
CHAPTER V

Two Gentlemen of Mystery.

The honorable the mayor, Monsieur Rouiffignac, stood on the stone flags of the City hall, or Principal, as it was yet called from the Spanish days, and looked contentedly out on the rue Chartres. He had come early, before the heat of the day, for some business with his clerks.

"Heigh-o!" sighed the mayor. "A long day for me! The council will not meet until ten—but I shall cut them short! Ah, there—good morning, Monsieur Mudge!"

Mr. Mudge, of the banking firm of Mudge & Fickert, was turning from the street: a tall and immaculate gentleman in high bell hat and new, long, tight trousers outside his equally tight boots; and behind him, the mayor noted, was Mr. Langhorne, the consul of Great Britain. The greetings were of punctilious respect.



"A Toast! The Plot! Ho, Villains, All—to the Plot!" And He Roared the Louder.

"What makes you so early astir, gentlemen?" queried His Honor. "As for me—I am the most lamentably overworked man in Louisiana. The governor sends me vast communications—all in the English, these days, which, unfortunately, I cannot read so well; and Monsieur La Tour, getting up his new city directory, insists that I read his proofs—and there is not a picayune victualer, nor a mender of pots that he does not get in so that New Orleans may claim rank with Philadelphia or New York! La—la! there are too many of us now!"

"You may well say," rejoined Mr. Mudge hurriedly, "complaint has already been made by the English captain—petty thieves made away with some of his merchandise on the Algierine dock. The customs people have pursued them—I believe one fellow was shot in a fracas down Bayou Barataria, near the plantation of Monsieur Berthoud."

"An outrage, sir," protested the consul. "In the name of his majesty I must make representations—"

"It is an affair, sir," said Monsieur Rouiffignac politely, "more for the United States authorities."

"Yes, but they are laughing about the town, sir! Rough fellows of the wineshops and the levees are all agog with this rumor that the bandit of Barataria has returned; and at once an outrage is put on the port's shipping!"

"Hum," said the mayor, "I know. Thirty cases of muskets, by some mistake, put out from the English ship on the dock. The port officers—"

"The captain of the Genaron has protested, sir," fumed the consul; "the cargo was destined for the Mexicoes. But some thieving villains take advantage of the question raised—"

"The Baratarians, Monsieur Mayor!" blustered the merchant; "the pardoned rascals of Jean Lafitte! The very rumor of his return disturbs commerce. Look, now—here comes old Gorgio, the crayfish seller—as big a villain as is unhung, pardoned by the President! And do you think he will trouble himself to step off the banquette when gentlemen come by, when he knows that half of Louisiana has come to think of Jean Lafitte as more patriot than pirate?"

"Hum—hum," mused the placid mayor; "some maintain that he saved the city in 1815. Eh, my dear consul!—but we are very good friends now, are we not? Hum—hum—and here comes Monsieur Dominique, who ought to know something about this idle gossip of Lafitte."

Mudge, the banker, bowed stiffly to the portly alderman; Langhorne, with a frown—there were some fastidious gentry who did not care for equality with the pardoned and Falstaffian buccaneer. The mayor turned slyly to him.

"Ah, Monsieur Dominique! The gentlemen ask of a matter upon which you might enlighten us. Lafitte's reputed return!"

The councilor raised a fat hand. "And if it were true, rue Royale would be ribboned to welcome him, I do believe!"

The respectable banker shrugged. "Enough! Mr. Langhorne, we shall take our business to the customs! The city is a trifler's town! And this other jest—the sailing of the Napoleon ship. Mr. Mayor, the folly leaps and grows! Sober, decent merchants entering the coffee houses are badgered by young roisterers to subscribe to the plot Napoleon! Anything for a fanfaronade, even if it brought England and the United States to war!"

Langhorne, the consul, raised a hand laughingly. "The Seraphine, good sirs, will be well watched once these crackbrains put her nose out the passes! His majesty is not atremble at this frolic!"

And with a bow the two gentlemen departed. Half a square distant, the consul turned to the banker.

"Colonel Carr, sir—has me distracted. He brings credentials from Quebec that I cannot ignore, and yet I mistrust him. Styled as a commissioner to the rebellious subjects of the Spanish king in New Granada, he has seemed overbusied up the Mississippi on his way overland."

"You fear Carr's honesty? Faith, the fellow has been too drunken to be dangerous. And you know his brawl with this Captain Sazarac? I should say they are both men of mystery out of the Northwest. The old talk of Aaron Burr's rival republic in the Mississippi valley is revived again; but if England is in it—"

"Perdition, sir! It is not so! He who comes to Louisiana thinking to find friction between the Yankees and the Creoles must be a better diplomat than Colonel Carr, sir—if that is what you mean!"

The merchant took snuff gravely. "We trust that he represents nothing but some malicious fur-traders, sir. Last night, I am informed, he had Madame Page's pension in an uproar. Starting to beat a black girl, he wound up by striking his wife; and then having a set-to with some unknown guest or caller. And the lady who is his wife, sir—is not of mettle to brook outrage."

"Mrs. Carr is of an old Tory family that fled from New York in the first war—bitter against the American government—far more than the British themselves. Then there is Carr's ward—"

"I had heard a famous beauty, sir."

"The young gallants already are agog for a peep at her when she is driven on the Esplanade. But the women seek absolute seclusion, humiliated utterly at Colonel Carr's conduct."

"The girl is of value to Carr's schemes, you think?"

Langhorne took his snuff absently. "That is the question. She was of a family that had great estates in the islands. She is loyal to the Carrs through gratitude to those who saved her life."

The merchant glanced at the clock in the cathedral facade.

"Well, enough of this. The coffee houses have already forgotten the affair of Carr and this adventurer Sazarac."

"This week the sensation is choosing the crew under Bossiere to man the Napoleon ship. Nothing has so tickled the popular fancy of the Creoles!"

"I trust your government does not take it seriously?"

The consul laughed shortly. "We watch it, sir! The clipper may take twoscore gallants out of the city, for if the thing is made fashionable enough, the Seraphine would sail with her decks crammed by ambitious admirals, commodores, captains and lieutenants! Bonaparte, himself, would be astounded at the array of perfumed gentlemen who would greet him in his exile!"

"Bossiere is to command," mused Mr. Mudge. "He, at least, is a seaman."

> "I am an evil legacy and I am forty-two."

NO SHORTAGE OF CARS FOR GRAIN

Fargo Man Returning From Conference Says Crop Will Be Speedily Handled.

MORE CARS ON HAND

Will Attempt to Equalize Allotments of Cars to Elevators—Lighter Crops Also Expected to Relieve Situation.

Fargo, N. D.—Because the North Dakota grain crop will be much lighter this year and because the eastern railroads have promised to have enough cars to move all crops, there will be no shortage of rolling stock to move the state crop this fall, according to R. F. Gunkelman of the Interstate Seed company, who returned recently from the meeting of the northwest regional advisory board of the American Railway association at Sioux Falls, S. D.

The adoption of a new car distribution rule after some 15 hours argument also will help insure an adequate car supply, Mr. Gunkelman said. The new rule calls for a distribution according to the amount of business to be done, rather than an equitable distribution as heretofore. For instance, if there is a farmers' elevator doing two-thirds of the business in a town, and a line company doing the other third, the farmers' elevator will receive the greater distribution until any congested condition is relieved.

Mr. Gunkelman said that the July 1 estimate of cars needed to move the North Dakota grain crop was 84,000 against 123,000 for last year. Damage by heat and rust within the last week will mean that the number will be reduced, he said.

The Sioux Falls meeting was attended by representatives of all eastern railroads, Mr. Gunkelman said. Among them were the presidents of three companies attending their first conference west of Chicago.

WILL PATROL MINN. BORDER

Minnesota Dry Director Takes Drastic Steps to Curb Smugglers.

Minneapolis.—Flying squadrons of prohibition enforcement agents, traveling in powerful automobiles and motor boats will be assigned to the international border line to check an anticipated renewal of rum running activities between Minnesota and Manitoba, S. B. Qvale, state prohibition enforcement director, announced here.

Mr. Qvale's announcement was made on his return from points in northern Minnesota and border towns of Manitoba, where, with M. L. Harney, group prohibition enforcement chief, he spent a week conferring with Canadian and American border officials and making plans for more stringent prohibition enforcement along the border.

"I will recommend to the prohibition commissioner at Washington that additional men and equipment be assigned to Minnesota," Mr. Qvale said. "While there is no indication as yet that liquor is being transported over the border, we anticipate trouble."

Mr. Qvale pointed out that there is a stretch of 130 miles between Warroad and St. Vincent, Minn., which is without any government officials.

He said that this territory is ideal for rumrunning across the border. He plans to detail agents for border duty regardless of whether additional forces are granted Minnesota, he said, and expects to assign them within a few weeks.

MANIACS OVERPOWER GUARD

Chester, Ill.—Twenty-three criminally insane convicts were at large in this vicinity following wholesale jail delivery at the state hospital for the criminal insane here in which one of the convicts was slain, two guards were stabbed seriously, and other guards and officials badly beaten. Many of those who escaped had been committed to the institution on their pleas of insanity when charged with murders in various parts of the state.

Numerous posses, including 50 guards of the southern Illinois penitentiary, which is adjacent to the hospital, police officers and citizens were scouring a thick wooded section north of Chester, where most of the fugitives are believed to be hiding. The unlevel topography of the section and bluffs skirting the Mississippi river nearby afford the criminals many secure hiding places, according to leaders of posses, who said the work of the pursuers was torturous.

Johnson's Plurality 94,846 Votes.

St. Paul, Minn.—Magnus Johnson, chosen United States senator on the Farmer-Labor ticket, had a plurality of 94,846 votes, complete semiofficial returns showed. Reports had been received by the secretary of state from 83 of the state's 87 county canvassing boards, and the county auditors in the other four counties—Lake of the Woods, Rice, Koochiching, and Beltrami—gave the figures for their county by telephone. This compilation of complete returns gave Johnson 290,165, and 195,319 for Preus, Republican.

STRONG PROOF BY MRS. A. H. LEARY

"I couldn't possibly have expected more than Tanlac has done for me," said Mrs. Arthur H. Leary, of 3406 St. Paul Ave., Minneapolis, Minn., recently.

"I had stomach trouble so bad I dreaded to sit down to the table because no matter how sparingly I ate, I suffered torture from sourness, gas, bloating and shortness of breath. I lost weight and became so weak that a half hour at housework tired me more than a half day's work tires me now. I had splitting headaches, too, and was so nervous I couldn't get a restful night's sleep.

"But these troubles are only a memory now. I am eating and sleeping fine, have gained several pounds, and am feeling perfectly well and happy. I don't know of any better way to help people who suffer than to get them to take Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

MATTER HE DIDN'T MENTION

Boastful Man Got Away With Box of Chocolates, but There Was a Reason.

A man was boasting to some others he had met that he could take any article from a shop without being detected. One of his hearers bet him that he could not take a box of chocolates in this way.

The man agreed and they went along to a grocer's shop.

"You wait here," said the daring one, "and you'll see!"

With these words he went into the shop, took a box of chocolates from the counter and walked out.

"There you are!" he said proudly. "I've won the wager!"

The stranger smiled.

"You're very smart!" he answered. "But I happen to be a detective and I am going to arrest you for stealing!"

"Wait a bit, sir," said the other coolly. "I happen to be the proprietor of the shop!"

All Dolled Up.

PROPHET TOLD OF LOCUSTS

Joel Warned People of Their Coming, Three Thousand Years Ago—Cicades Less Numerous.

The locust has been a plague to mankind for centuries.

"The land is as the Garden of Eden before them," said the Prophet Joel almost 3,000 years ago, "and behind them a wilderness; yea, nothing shall escape them." He described the coming of the locusts as "a day of cloud and thick darkness; as dusk spreads over the mountains."

The periodical clades, some of which appear every 13 and others every 17 years, do not devastate the land they pass over in the same degree as locusts that descended from the arid steppes of Asia. Periodical cicades are growing less numerous owing to the cutting down of forests. The eggs are laid in tender twigs of trees, and if no trees are at hand their propagation is prevented to a large extent. Birds are enemies of the insects, especially the English sparrow. No remedy is practicable against them in large numbers over large areas.—Detroit News.

The Meat of the Wheat

STARCH is the "meat" of the wheat berry. It is the great energy-producing element of the grain. But, in order to do you any good, it must be thoroughly digested, and it is right here that such a food as Grape-Nuts renders special service.

Grape-Nuts, made from wheat and malted barley, supplies the meat of the wheat in most digestible form.

That is because in the making of Grape-Nuts a large proportion of the starch is converted into dextrins and maltose—forms into which all starch elements must be changed before they can be assimilated by the system.

Grape-Nuts not only digests easily, but also aids in the digestion of other foods.

Crisp, delicious Grape-Nuts with milk or cream is a complete food. It supplies the life-essential vitamin-B; also iron, phosphorus and other important mineral elements for nerve, tooth, bone and other body structure.

The daily use of Grape-Nuts is a form of health insurance which has demonstrated its value for more than 25 years.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Montevideo—The 12 women's clubs of Montevideo have pledged their support to the guarantors of Montevideo's 1924 chautauqua.

Rochester — Commencement exercises were conducted in the high school here at which 114 country and village eighth grade pupils received diplomas.

Owatonna—The Steele County Federation of Women's clubs will have a picnic and business session at Mineral Springs park, here, July 24. A leader of the state federation will speak.

Owatonna—A freight train on the Rock Island ran over and killed an unidentified laborer at a point in the city just outside the railroad's switching yards.

Willmar—E. T. Sandbo, member of the city council, had a narrow escape from death when his car rolled down a 14 foot embankment on a highway near Green Lake.

Willmar—In addition to expressing their choice for United States senator the voters of Willmar ballotted on proposed bond issue for rebuilding the water works system.

Austin—For the fourth successive time Mower county cakemakers have won first place in the southern district of Minnesota. This year a Mower county team also won first place in the advanced breadmaking class.

Thief River Falls—The flowage of water in the Red Lake river is gradually lessening and hardly enough is going over the dam to furnish power for the city in addition to that required by the flour mill which has prior rights.

Fairmont—Eight hundred persons from St. James, had a picnic in Interlaken park here. Fishing and dancing were the principal amusements. The St. James band and ball team accompanied the delegation.

Fairmont—One hundred delegates from southern Minnesota towns gathered at a banquet to start a movement they hope will result in the routing through southern Minnesota of the new Atlantic-Yellowstone-Pacific trail.

Rochester—Rochester through its oil well, now being drilled is becoming an attraction in southeastern Minnesota. Ever since the drilling started, thousands of local people have visited Bigelow's hill to view operations at the well.

Owatonna—A series of 10 meetings at various points in Steele county is to be conducted next for the discussion of the betterment of public health. Dr. Lockhead of the Minnesota Public Health association will be the principal speaker.

Northrop—Fifteen hundred persons attended the Northrop Co-operative Creamery outing. Northrop business men and members of the Waverly and Westford Farmers' clubs attended, as did delegations from many towns in this section.

Fairmont—Delegations from Sioux Falls, Jackson, Luverne and Fairmont met here to consider ways and means of bringing the new Atlantic-Yellowstone-Pacific highway through southern Minnesota on State Road No. 9. Sioux Falls has raised $38,000 to help put it through.

Luverne—The tax levies for Rock county and the city of Luverne have been made up. The county commissioners have added $10,000 to the interest and sanatorium funds, making the county levy the same as last year, $94,000. The city levy has been cut from $68,000 to $44,362.

Windom—At the annual meeting of the Co-operative Elevator company, held here, a dividend of 7 per cent was declared. Each patron was paid a rebate of 1 per cent on all grain marketed in the last year, and the sum of $3,000 was ordered placed in the company's sinking fund.

Blooming Prairie—Lutheran congregations of Owatonna, Ellendale, and this city conducted joint services and had a picnic here. Approximately 2,500 persons from the three towns and from other Southern Minnesota Lutheran congregations attended.

Windom — Farmyard watering troughs have claimed two little children as victims by drowning in the last few days. On a farm near Wilmont a little year and one-half old son of Henry Sieve fell into the watering trough and was dead when found. Near Springfield, a 2 year old son of Fred C. Bolfany was drowned in a similar manner.

Fairmont—State Game and Fish Commissioner Carlos Avery has given City Engineer Frank O. Jones instructions to rush plans for deepening and enlarging the channels between Lake Sisseton and Budd, Budd and Hall, Hall and Amber, in this county, and also to clear the channel between South Silver lake and Iowa lake. The state treasury has profited, it is estimated, more than $100,000 from rough fish sold from these lakes.

Red Lake Falls—Red Lake county is asking $105,000 in loans from the Minnesota rural credits bureau. Twelve applications have been sent in from this county on a total of 2,846 acres, or an average of 237 acres to the application.

Worthington—Because they have failed to comply with state laws regulating rural schools, nine school districts in Nobles county will lose $150 each this year. One school had neglected to fly the stars and stripes, another had poor facilities for drinking water and the others have inadequate buildings

Kenyon—The University of Minnesota will conduct a soils and alfalfa day at their experimental fields on the Voxland and Foss farms near Kenyon.

Winona—Funeral services for County Attorney Earl Simpson, republican political leader, who died suddenly of hemorrhage of the stomach, were conducted her at the Central Methodist church.

Fairmont—The Minnesota conference, Epworth league institute, has been permanently awarded to Fairmont, it was announced by Dean E. C. Horn after a conference with C. E. Guthrie, national secretary.

St. Peter—St. Peter is ready for its biggest convention of the year, the annual session of the third district legion and auxiliary, which will meet for two days. More than 10,000 people are expected to attend.

Ortonville—One of the first land deals of the season was closed when Titus Schau, living a mile north of Correll, sold his 260-acre improved farm to H. Barnhardt of Triumph, Minn., for a consideration of $40,000.

Albert Lea—Adolph Christensen, a farmer of Bath township, Freeborn county, has on his place a harvester that is still being used after 33 years' service. It was bought in 1890 and for sevral years did service on two farms every season.

Red Wing—Red Wing's proposed $150,000 improvemnt bond issue, submitted to supply funds for paving and other street improvements, was approved. Of 2,357 votes cast, the proposed issue received 1,516, or 337 more than necessary.

Jaskson—The county commissioners of Jackson county have voted $150,000 road bonds with which to complete the grading and graveling of trunk highway No. 4 between this city and Windom, a distance of approximately 20 miles. Work will start as soon as the bonds have been sold.

Jackson—Eli Land of Windom was elected district commander of the second district American Legion in convention here. State Commander G. V. Barron of Cloquet was the principal speaker at a banquet attended by visitng service men and the women's auxiliary of Jackson.

Duluth—Sister Serena of St. Raphael's hospital, St. Cloud, was elected president of the Minnesota and North Dakota district of the Catholic Hospital association of the United States, and Canada, at the end of a two day meeting at St. Mary's hospital, of the district association.

Belle Plaine—Joe Haig, a 15-year-old lad, who joined a small traveling circus two ago, was drowned in the Minnesota river here when he stepped into a deep hole while bathing with a group of boys. Officials of the circus which showed here declare they do not know where the boy's home is or anything about him.

Hibbing — A grasshopper plague which is destroying crops in several sections of northern Minnesota is proving a boon to poultry raisers. Owners of chicken farms at Dewey Lake, midway between Hibbing and Chisholm, report grasshoppers are so thick that it is not necessary to feed the chickens.

Ely—A telephone message received at the office of the forest supervisor here tells of Wilho Somero and George Moravitz, two United States forest guards being driven off their beats by a bear and her two cubs. They were patroling the telephone line in the Superior National forest when they came upon the bears.

Austin—Austin's proposed lighting system in the downtown district virtually is assured by the passage of an amendment to the city charter at the special election. Out of a total of 1,639 votes cast on the charter amendments, 1,099 voters expressed their approval of the installation of a modern lighting system.

St. Paul—F. W. Mattson, commissioner of public safety of St Paul, is to be named member of the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission to succeed Charles W. Sterling, recent appointee, who resigned after filling the office for two weeks. Mr. Sterling was named to succeed F. W. Putnam, who resigned to go into law practice in Minneapolis.

Duluth—Completion of arrangements for the purchase from the Weyerhauser interests of Cloquet additional power properties on the St. Louis river, by the American Power and Light company, which recently acquired the Great Northern Power and the Minnesota Utilities company, was announced by W. S. Robtreson of the Phoenix Utilities company, which is in charge of developments in this district.

Rochester—The last of the famous Mayowood herd of Herefords, which at one time numbered 500, will be disposed of at public auction. The work of breaking up and disposing of this herd, which was known throughout the Northwest, has been going on for several months. At present approximately 75 head remain at the Mayowood farms and the decision to disperse the herd came after the owner, Dr. C. H. Mayo, decided to go exclusively and extensively into the development of a dairy herd.

Chisholm—The special election called for the voting upon the question of $600,000 bond issue will be conducted here July 28. The money is to be used in refunding the outstanding indebtedness of the municipality.

Easton—Attempts to sink to a greater depth the "gas" well struck near here by well-diggers have so far failed, because of the pressure of gas in the well, which is down to a depth of 140 feet. The livestock on the farm are said to suffer from the fumes, and vegetation in the immediate neighborhood of the well is also said to be showing signs of wilting.

The Girl I Love.

Several days ago Ed L. Hall, of this city, came into possession of a one dollar bill, with the following inscription neatly typewritten across its face: "This is my last dollar, and I gave it to the girl I love."

Mr. Hall is of the opinion that a real "human interest" story awaits some budding "O. Henry," with the necessary tact and patience to find this modern lover, remarks the Indianapolis News.

Parting with one's last dollar is a circumstance which might easily be fraught with tragic significance at any time, and in this case it seems doubly so.

But, of course, "the girl I love" may have been his sister, his "last dollar" may have gone for candy, and the next day may have been his regular pay day. Who knows the answer? Some one does!

Cause of Receding Chin.

The receding chin, so common nowadays, has been caused by parents swathing their infants to the eyes with two much clothing when taking them out for an airing, according to Dr. Leonard Williams in a lecture at the Royal institute in London.

"The chins of many children are now bandaged in such a way as to keep out the beneficent rays of the sun and to prevent its growth," Doctor Williams declared.

The Difficulty.

"The feller that owned this hotel before I took it over," related the landlord of the Petunia Tavern, "wanted to name it after himself and call it the 'White House.'"

"Did he?" nonchalantly, asked a guest.

MELLON NOT TALKATIVE MAN

Secretary of the Treasury Will Never Make Reputation as a Great Conversationalist.

Two Scotsmen, noted for their rarity of speech, were playing golf. Up to the seventeenth hole neither spoke a word.

It began to rain and Sandy observed: "Shall we quit?"

"Chatterbox," muttered his opponent, as he drove off the final.

Secretary Mellon is silent like that, writes "Girard" in the Philadelphia Enquirer. If, as our copybooks informed us, silence is golden, that able banker came by his great wealth in the most natural way.

"This is not a talkative cabinet"—that from a Philadelphia coal man often brought into contact with Mr. Hoover and others of the presidential family.

"But," he continued, "Secretary Mellon can say less in a day than all the rest of them put together."

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale Notice

Whereas, default has occurred in the conditions of that certain mortgage made by Clarence Docken, a single man, mortgagor, to Red Lake Building Association of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagee, dated February 16, 1916, and with a power of sale therein contained, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall county, Minnesota, on the 17th day of February, 1916, at eight-thirty o'clock A. M., in Book 76 of Mortgage Deeds on page 614.

And, whereas, there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage, the sum of Two Hundred Eighty one and 23-100 dollars ($281.23), and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in, and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

Lot Five (5) of Block Ten (10), in the village of Holt in Marshall County, Minnesota, according to the recorded plat thereof on file in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Marshall and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Marshall county, at the west front door of the court house, in the city of Warren, in said county and state, on the 15th day of September, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Two Hundred Eighty one and 23-100 dollars ($281.23), and the interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and Fifty dollars attorneys fees, as stipulated in, and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Great Northern Pays
Tribute To Loyal Employes

Justice to the rank and file of earnest and loyal workers in railroad service calls for the correction of an impression created in some quarters by radical leaders that the employes are seeking to destroy the railroads by inefficient and disloyal service. It is true that a comparatively small number of union leaders are seeking to cause a breakdown of the railroads under private operation with a view to bringing about Government ownership. We believe that there remains today among the great majority of railroad workers the same fine sense of loyalty and honor towards the companies that has always characterized their service. That this is particularly true of the Great Northern is evidenced by the following resolutions unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Great Northern Veterans Association on June, 22, 1923:

WHEREAS from various sources it has been learned that the financial affairs of the railroads in the Northwest are insufficient to sustain a satisfactory financial condition; that much of the difficulty is due to high operating costs on account, among other things, of the present high prices of fuel and other supplies, and the rapid increase of late years in taxation, and

WHEREAS, it is most important to the employe to know that

His wages will be fair,

That he will be promptly and properly paid, when due, for services rendered,

That he is secure in his employment,

That his conditions of employment are good,

all of which depend upon the financial stability of the railroad, and

WHEREAS, in some quarters there is propaganda which tends toward the Government ownership of railroads to secure which the railroad employes are exhorted to assist in bringing about that result by hampering the management through failure to give a full day's work for a full day's pay, and

WHEREAS, we believe it would be dishonorable and also destructive to the interests of the employe for him to adopt a policy of not giving a full and efficient day's work for a full day's pay,

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that we condemn all propaganda designed to bring about any such policy as being dishonorable and destructive and that we trust and believe the Great Northern employes will not permit themselves to be led into such an unworthy and futile course.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that for ourselves we believe it is right and also clearly in our interest to support the management in its efforts to provide adequate and prompt service to the public and we pledge ourselves to do our full part in promoting cordial understanding and cooperative spirit in all matters of mutual interest between the Company and its employes.

The spirit of enthusiastic loyalty shown by these Veterans of 25 years or more of service with the Great Northern is the spirit that prevails among its 30,000 employes.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Lund arrived home last Saturday from their drive to southern Minnesota where they were called on account of the death of Mrs. Ole Lund. They visited relatives of Mr. Lund's at Wanamingo and also at the home of Mrs. Lund's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Tosdahl at Estherville, Iowa. They were accompanied back to Holt by Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Tosdal who will spend a time visiting at the Lund home.

Our Nation Mourns

President Harding was taken sick last week with an attack of indigestion and was ordered by his physicians to give up the rest of his scheduled trip and return to Washington. As he was too ill to travel, he was confined to his room in a hotel at San Francisco. Monday afternoon pneumonia developed and his condition is considered very grave. Later: President Harding died last night at 9:30 coast time, (11:30 our time), and all the nation mourns his death. Our one comfort is that Mr. Coolidge is a good christian man and will make an able and fearless president.

Sugar Factory for Thief River Falls

The announcement made this week that the erection of a beet sugar factory in Thief River Falls is practically a certainty will act as a wonderful stimulant to the people of this section of the State. It will mean a complete transformation of the farming industry in this vicinity and will do more to bring about an era of prosperity here than anything that has taken place in the past fifteen years. The raising of sugar beets by the farmers means a greater diversification of crops, the elimination of small grain farming and the weed pest that accompanies it, a profitable money producing crop and another boost for dairying.

It has already been demonstrated that the farmers can make money raising sugar beets and it is also a well known fact that the beet tops make the finest kind of feed for dairy cattle. It now behooves the farmers to get busy at once and properly prepare all land they can take care of for the sugar beet crop next year. Proper preparation of the land is a very important item in the successful raising of the beet crop and right now is the time to get at it.

With sugar beets, alfalfa, clover, potatoes, corn and cows northwestern Minnesota has a future that will outshine any other section of the state. All shoulders should now be put to the wheel to cinch this sugar factory beyond all possible doubt.—Thief River Falls Times.

Notice to the Public:- The City Barber Shop will now be open all day and evening. G. O. Gregerson, Barber, Holt, Minn.

Ole Davidson's bid of $540.00, for building the concrete abutements and other work on the new Ringbo bridge, was accepted on Wednesday by the town boards of East Valley and Holt.

John Holst sold four yearlings to J. M. Swan last week for the neat sum of $205.90. Who can beat it? Mr. Holst also headed the creamery list for the month of June, with 366 pounds of butterfat to his credit. This looks as tho Mr. Holst understands both the beef and dairy industries.

Robert J. Lund states that the crop condition in southern Minnesota and Iowa are in a fairly good condition. The dry spell which they had in the southern part of the state did not effect the grain, but was disastrous to the hay and pastures. We can congratulate ourselves that we are living in a land of good hay and pastures. This should prove more than ever that we must come to the raising of more dairy cows and tame hay. It will prove the salvation of northern Minnesota.

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for the Benefit of Busy Readers

Washington

Washington—Tariff commission to hold second public hearing this week in investigation under flexible tariff provision.

Washington—Recognition of Russia still far off, Secretary of State C. E. Hughes indicates in letter to President Samuel Gompers of American Federation of Labor.

Washington — Samuel Untermeyer joins forces of Senator R. M. La Follette in effort to place stock exchanges under federal control.

Washington—General J. J. Pershing leaves Washington on 10,000 mile tour to inspect summer training camps and observe progress of new citizen army.

Washington—State Senator Buck of Illinois says Harding administration should cease stressing world court and prohibition and turn to fundamentals.

Washington—Copies of all records and official documents relating to the Chester concession in Turkey have been filed with the State department for its information by the Ottoman-American Development company, owners of the rights. K. E. Clayton-Kennedy, who appeared for the company said the organization expected to start preliminary work at once in developing its concessions.

Washington—Director Hines of the Veterans bureau announced that he was preparing to order a number of negro physicians to duty at the veterans hospital at Tuskegee, Ala., where the question of negro personnel has caused a bitter controversy. The director declared he completed a list of negro physicians available for service in the institution.

Washington—The cost of living advanced on an average of ½ to 1 per cent in the United States between March and June, and in June it became 69.7 per cent higher than in 1913, according to figures made public by the department of labor.

Washington—A personal plea to President Harding from "two girl pals" in Iowa for establishment of government training camps for girls where there would be "real training at shooting, drills and everything, similar to the boys," reached the war department via the White House. And it drew a prompt answer from Major General Davis, adjutant general of the army, that the "pals" had raised "some most important questions which, you may rest assured, will be studied carefully."

Domestic

San Francisco—The engagement of Gouveneur Morris, author, and his secretary, Miss Helen Wrightman, was announced here. Morris recently obtained a divorce in Los Angeles.

Helena, Mont.—Spring and winter wheat will show an increase of more than 1,000,000 bushels over that produced a year ago. There was wheat loss in this state because of hoppers and hail, but recent rains will offset this setback. Rust apparently is negligible. Oats are showing an increase of about 1,000,000 bushels over a year ago, and the outlook is excellent. Corn will return a yield much smaller than a year ago.

Kansas City—Invention of a gasoline engine without pistons which, its inventor believes, will revolutionize the motor car industry, was announced by Charles Brotherton here.

Belvidere, N. J.—Sudden appearance of a family of alligators caused summer campers, along the Delaware river, near here, abruptly to suspend boating and bathing activities. A mother alligator and four babies are still at large. The father was killed by Henry Boardman, a ferryman, who repeatedly struck it over the head with an oar.

New York—A slump in the market for the sale of art collections, so great that some valuable articles would not bring $10, was described to Supreme Court Justice Lyndon during the hearing of a petition to make permanent a temporary injunction secured by J. Purves Carter, art expert, in which Eli Joseph, former junk dealer, now connoisseur, was restrained from attempting to sell art objects valued at $3,000,000, of which Carter is part owner.

New York—A contract has been signed between the Western Union Telegraph company and the Italian Submarine Cables company for the establishment of direct cable communication between the United States and Italy via the Azores.

Los Angeles—Gaston Glass, motion picture actor and former protegt of Sarah Bernhardt, announced his retirement from the screen until he has been cleared of police court charges growing out of a raid on a residence in the Hollywood district several weeks ago.

Pottsville, Pa.—John Schultz, who, because of his unusual height—6 feet 6 inches—was selected by President Abraham Lincoln to stand beside him when he reviewed the northern troops at the close of the Civil war, is dead at his home here.

Boston—Kitchell Snow, a Harvard graduate, was killed when his airplane which he was piloting crashed at Jeffries Point, east Boston. Two passengers, Sergeant Oscar Le Cain, a National Guardsman, and a 10 year old boy, Howard Carkin, of North Chelmsford, said to be Le Cain's cousin, were injured.

Sports

Aberdeen, S. D.—The Dakota baseball league exists no longer. The league has been dissolved due to financial difficulties. The dissolving of the league was announced by Sam Calmeson, president of the Watertown club. President Cantillon and mangers of the three other clubs in the league held a conference and decided that if Watertown could not pay a stipulated sum to tide the club over, that the league would disband.

New York—Benny Leonard is still the lightweight champion of the world and a greater champion than any time during his career. Possibly not greater in his own natural ability but greater in comparison with the field that bids for his crown. The consummate art with which he outclassed Lew Tendler, the foremost contender, in their 15 round decision battle in the Yankee Stadium, was so convincing that no doubt exists as to where the crown belongs and where it will stay for some time to come.

New York—Johnny Dundee is now featherweight champion of the world. The great little Italian fighter dethroned Eugene Criqui, the game Frenchman, in a gruelling 15 round battle at the Polo Grounds. Criqui took the worst beating that has been dealt out to a fighter in this section in many years. The game soldier fighter never at any stage of the journey had a chance with the elusive Dundee. His gameness was all he had left when only half the journey had been traversed.

Foreign

London—The house of lords passed, without a debate, the third reading of Lady Astor's bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to any person under 18 years of age. The measure, which already passed the commons, now becomes law, provided the assent of the crown is given.

Tokio—The Marine Products association announces unusual currents along the eastern coast of Japan coinciding with those of the famine year of 1913. From Hokkaido to Choshi the temperature of the water is three degrees colder than normal, lowering the temperature on land. It is feared that damages to crops may result. A research vessel has been sent to examine the condition.

Berlin—In the elections conducted throughout Germany of delegates to the forthcoming metal workers congress at Cassel, the returns show that the communists are winning all along the line and that the social democrats everywhere are in the minority. There have been many abstentions from voting, however, particularly in Berlin, where only 40 per cent of the metal workers cast ballots.

London—The rapidity with which negotiations were carried out for the British debt to the United States was due to the fact that neither Secretary W. D. Mellon, Prime Minister Baldwin nor the governor of the Bank of England ever had been a lawyer, is the opinion of the premiers speaking at a dinner at which Secretary Mellon, London bankers and merchants and directors of the Bank of England also were guests.

Berlin—Negotiations between the ministry of finance and the Reichbank and other of the big banks for the issue of an internal loan on a gold basis have been concluded and the loan will be issued shortly. It will be a loan of from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 golf marks, bearing interest at five per cent and maturing in 12 years, repayable on the dollar basis at the rate quoted in New York.

Paris—Despite the official announcement that Irene Castle has obtained a divorce from her husband, Captain Robert Treman, he preserved the strictest silence on his domestic affairs, refusing to state whether he is divorced or married. The affair, however, does not worry him and he is nightly seen at Monmarte, usually accompanied by William Riordan, Irene's dancing partner, Treman's jealousy of whom, it is reported, started the difficulties of the couple.

Paris—Charles Loeb, leading American attorney, estimated that 1,500 Americans, 75 per cent of whom are women, are in Paris preparing to obtain divorces before autumn. The cheapness, ease and lack of publicity in the average divorce in Paris, coupled with the low rate of exchange for francs, makes a trip to Paris, with its accompanying pleasures and wild life, more attractive than a trip to Reno or California for American divorce seekers.

Stockholm—Archbishop Soederblom of Upsala is leaving for America Sept. 15 in response to an invitation from the Augustana synod of the Lutheran church and the North American Church federation. He will address meetings at Philadelphia, in November, and will lecture at Yale, Harvard, Columbia and Chicago universities, returning to Sweden by Christmas. The archbishop, who is the head of the state church of Sweden and spiritual adviser to the royal family, will be the chief foreign dignitary at the dedication of the new buildings of Augustana college at Rock Island, Ill.

Pontiex, Sask.—A cloud of millions of grasshoppers, about an eighth of a mile wide and several miles long, obscured the sky above this town for three hours. The insects, blown along by a breeze about one hundred feet above the ground, were carried toward the northwest.

London—The first three appeals from the Irish Free State courts to the privy council came before that body and in each case the council denied leave to appeal on the ground that they were not of sufficient importance for review of their decisions in the national courts.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Willmar—Contracts for the new concrete storage tank and pumping equipment were let by the city council at a figure of $36,000.

Pipestone—Fire destroyed the Pipestone Steam Laundry at a loss estimated at $5,000. Defective wiring is believed to have been the cause.

Red Wing—One man was injured, probably fatally, windows in houses and doors were smashed by an explosion of a kerosene storage tank belonging to the Thies Lumber company at Elmwood, Wis., 35 miles from here.

Willmar—A 15-year-old Willmar girl was saved from drowning by R. F. Johnson, business man of this city, when the girl went down for the third time. She had waded beyond her depth and couldn't swim.

Hibbing—Farmers living in the Swandale vicinity, one of the most thriving farming communities in northern Minnesota, expect to harvest the greatest small grain crop in the history of the country, according to Supervisor John Hayden.

Willmar—The vote on the question of maintaining a county nurse the coming year apparently was voted down heavily in the school board elections in Kandiyohi county. In some districts the vote was unanimously against the continuation of the work.

Granite Falls—Earl Wiefels, aged 18 years, of Ghent, Minn., was drowned while bathing in the Minnesota river near the Minnesota Falls power plant here. His body was recovered in seven feet of water 35 minutes after he went down.

Owatonna—Contracts have been let and work begun on the 19th building to be added to the plant of "Minnesota's Biggest County Fair" here. The new structure is the dairy building recently authorized by the fair.

Waseca—The creamery operators' association of the 10th district had their annual picnic here at Maplewood park, Clear Lake. Representatives from creameries in Dodge, Freeborn, Steele, Rice and Waseca counties were in attendance.

Rochester—Rochester business and professional men, including bankers, doctors, lawyers, merchants, newspaper men and others, will be given an opportunity to get first-hand information on the work that is being done in connection with Olmsted county boys and girls club organization, on a tour which will cover all parts of the county.

Rochester—Mrs. Newman, a patient at the state hospital for the insane, used salt on the bars in a window of her room until they were rusted so badly she could break them, then tied bedsheets together and lowered herself down three stories and got away. She wandered as far as Pine Island, where she was held until hospital guards brought her back.

Duluth—Notice of an appeal to the state supreme court from the order of Judge W. A. Cant denying more than $5,000,000 in claims for alleged property depreciation to owners of property adjoining the "North Forty" of Hibbing, that the mining companies seek to have vacated, was filed with the clerk of district court by attorneys for the property owners.

Duluth—C. L. Evenson, Moorhead, was re-elected president of the Minnesota Retail Grocers and General Merchants association at the 27th annual convention of the association here. Other officers elected were: L. H. Hanson, Minneapolis, first vicepresident; G. K. Haukebo, Underwood, second vicepresident, and J. W. Lux, St. Paul, treasurer.

Redwood Falls—Efforts are being made to learn the cause of several cases of typhoid fever which are reported in Redwood Falls. One death, that of Mrs. Lulu Fosnes, a milliner, has occurred. The bathing beach, city water and spring water have all been investigated, the examination, physicians say, showing that none of the water from these places show any contamination.

Winona—The summer term of the Winona State Teachers' college ended when a class of 43 students was graduated. Diplomas were presented by J. M. McConnell, state commissioner of education. Before the fall term of the college is started, work is expected to be commenced on the new main building to replace the structure destroyed by fire last December.

Duluth—Unlimited prosperity awaits the United States and Canada both in commercial lines and national growth providing the deep waterway project is made a reality instead of a discussion as is now the situation. This was the assertion of Sir Henry Worth Thornton, K. B. E., president of the Canadian National railways, in an interview while a visitor in Duluth.

St. Charles—Work on St. Charles' $200,000 school now has progressed to the second story, with bricklaying seriously hampered in the last week by the hot weather.

Red Wing—"Is a gypsy a tourist entitled to use the camp provided by the city for travelers?" This question has arisen here with the occupation of the grounds by a gypsy band consisting of three men, three women and a dozen children, who have been at the camp 10 days, giving as an excuse that one of their cars is being repaired here. They are under orders to move as soon as the car is fixed.

Slayton—L. C. Johanson, aged 53, a farmer living near this village, was drowned by falling into the water tank on his farm.

Comfrey—Mrs. Martin Windschitl, wife of Mayor Winschitl, was drowned in Long Lake, six miles south of St. James while bathing.

Albert Lea—For the first time since he was shot at his farm home near Alden, Louis Kassa, who has a bullet in his brain, regained consciousness and has been conscious at intervals since.

Winona—Erection of a livestock pavilion in Winona awaits the pledging of only $5,000, sponsors of the movement announced, in making known that farmers and breeders of this section already had pledged $20,000. It is planned to start work on the project as soon as $25,000 is raised.

Ortonville—Completing a trip of 575 miles in covered wagons, the families of P. J. Wilkie and D. Wilkie, have reached Clinton from Creston, Iowa, and will settle on a farm near the former place. The journey was made in three weeks.

Faribault—County Auditor Frank M. Kaisersatt predicts a reduction of 25 per cent in the county tax levy from that of 1923. The levy was not completed at the midsummer meeting of the county board because of the effort that is being made to reduce taxes.

Lakefield—Plans are now being made for the first annual outing of the southwestern Minnesota division of the Modern Woodmen of America at Fox Lake park. Several hundred members of the Woodmen order and their families are expected to participate in the affair.

Faribault—The Chamber of Commerce is considering plans for the laying of an airplane landing field here. The field, if the proposal is adopted, will make Faribault an important point on the war department's aerial route from the Twin Cities south through Des Moines, Kansas City, Tulsa, Dallas, San Antonio and Brownsville.

Rochester—What is believed to be the smallest calf ever born in southern Minnesota is now to be seen on one of the Mayowood farms southwest of this city. It weighed but 15 pounds at birth, whereas the average calf weighs from 50 to 60 pounds. It showed indications of getting along all right.

New Richland—The second of a series of Lutheran union church services, similar to that in which Ellendale, Owatonna, Blooming Prairie and Red Oak Grove churches joined a week ago, will be held here Sunday, August 5. Waseca, Owatonna, New Richland, Hartland, Ellendale, Le Sueur river and Albert Lea congregations are expected to turn out in force.

Little Falls—Al Virock, who suffered a recurrence of shellshock he received during the war as the result of an automobile accident near here, and who disappeared from the hotel shortly following the accident, was found wandering through the woods four miles from here by a sheriff's posse. His mind was a total blank, officials said.

Owatonna—The Steele county fair, the first Minnesota county fair to use metropolitan newspaper advertising to further its success and known as "Minnesota's Biggest County Fair," plans to augment its campaign of publicity in leading Twin City newspapers by using 40 weekly newspapers in Minnesota and Iowa and 11 other dailies.

Blooming Prairie—The dedication of Blooming Prairie's community athletic recreation grounds, Victory field, will be held on Armistice day instead of in connection with the homecoming planned by the local commercial club. The new date was selected as more suitable, since the field is to be a memorial to Blooming Prairie's war dead and to her living veterans.

Winona—Organized labor, which lost control of the Winona city council last spring after a four-year administration, was strengthened to a point where control was once more possible as a result of the action of the council in choosing Henry C. Krier, former alderman at large and friend of the unions, to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of Frank C. Landon, president of the council.

Austin—During the school election here Saturday, some enthusiastic women were surprised to learn they had laid themselves liable to prosecution as violators of the Minnesota act to prevent corrupt practices at elections. They used their automobiles for hauling voters to the polls, which is against the law, and also resorted to solicitation of voters within 100 feet of the polling place.

Faribault—The American legion auxiliary of the department of Minnesota will use the local high school building for a convention hall while members of the legion are using the national guard armory for their headquarters on Aug. 13, 14 and 15. One thousand delegates and a large number of visitors are expected for the auxiliary, together with a large number of visitors, while approximately twice as many legion delegates and a similar proportion of visiting legionnaires are expected.

Thief River Falls—Officials of the Pennington County Fair association have decided to extend the fair this year one more day, making the dates for the event Aug. 1 to 4, inclusive.

Owatonna—Private funeral services were held for Mrs. Katherine A. Darby, wife of B. E. Darby, pioneer resident and publisher of the Daily People's Press of this city. Mrs. Darby died suddenly, death resulting from a blood clot.

Willmar—Ralleigh Ferguson, aged 15, is dead from injuries received when he fell upon a pitchfork as he slid down a haystack.

HARDING SUFFERS SERIOUS RELAPSE

President's Condition Is Grave, Physicians Declare When Pneumonia Developes.

CAN PUT UP A FIGHT

Chief Executive's Illness Takes Serious Turn and Officials With Him on Tour Are Disturbed After Consultation.

Presidential Headquarters, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.—Gravely ill with bronchial pneumonia, President Harding battled for his life.

The five physicians attending the chief executive let it be known that they had used the word "fight" advisedly when the last statement from the sick chamber was issued, adding, however, that Mr. Harding was "well adapted" from a temperamental standpoint to make the "fight" a strong one.

Presidential Headquarters, Palace Hotel, San Francisco — President Harding's condition became grave, and an announcement was made to the effect after a consultation by physicians in attendance upon the chief executive.

The physicians declared in a statement that "definite central patches of bronchial pneumonial had developed in the right lung as indicated clinically and by the X-ray."

The development of pneumonia was the one thing which Brigadier General Sawyer, the president's personal physician, had said less than two hours earlier that he feared almost above all else, as a complication.

Secretary Work, one of the consulting physicians, left the president's rooms plainly disturbed by the change in the president's condition. He was joined by Secretary Hoover, and with one of the physicians, Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, went to another floor of the hotel to talk over the situation.

Dr. Wilbur's countenance was grave. The bulletin issued read as follows:

"Definite central bronchial pneumonia in the right lung, as indicated clinically and by the X-ray.

"Nourishment is being taken regularly and the abdominal symptoms are less noticeable.

"While his condition is grave, he is temperamentally well adapted to make a strong fight against the infection.

"Pulse, temperature, and respiration are about the same as shown in the previous reports.

(Signed) "C. E. Sawyer, M. D.,
"Ray Lyman Wilbur, M. D.,
"C. M. Cooper, M. D.,
"J. T. Boone, M. D.,
"Hubert Work, M. D."

Soon after the issuance of the bulletin, Lieutenant Commander Boone went out for a walk, which he said might well be interpreted as meaning that no crisis was immediately expected.

Announcement was made that there would be no further consultations or bulletins issued during the night unless there was a decided change in the condition of the chief executive.

Members of the president's party, as they scanned the last bulletin issued, were prompt to note the measured words of the physicians when they read the president was "temperamentally" as contrasted with "physically" adapted to make a strong fight against the bronchial pneumonia infection.

CALL FOR HELP ENORMOUS

Harvest Is Now General Over State and Men Are in Demand.

Fargo.—Four hundred orders for men could not be filled by the United States employment office in Fargo for the harvest fields of the state, Mrs. M. B. Bowe, superintendent of the office announced. The call for harvest hands is daily becoming more insistent, she said.

Harvesting of all grains, including wheat, has started over the entire state, with the exception of the extreme north, Mrs. Bowe said, and the demand for harvest labor is exceeding the supply. The fact that the harvest is so general at this time is responsible, in part at least, for the shortage, she said.

About 150 men a day are applying for work through the Fargo office. Harvesting in South Dakota is just about completed, it was said, and thousands of men are being released from there.

Russian Policy Is Unchanged.

Moscow.—Russia's policy toward her foreign debts and compensation to her creditors remains unchanged from the policy announced at Genoa, Christian Rakovsky, recently appointed head of the Russian delegation to London, announced in a conference with representatives of the foreign press. The policy announced at Genoa, M. Rakovsky recalled, was mutual recognition of debts. He declared that the establishment of free ports in Russia now is out of date and it was not credit but capital that Russia needs.

COULD HARDLY DO ANY WORK

Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound This Woman Feels So Well

Keeseville, N. Y.—"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for the good it has done me. I was so much troubled with female weakness I could hardly do any work. I saw your advertisement in the paper, and read it to my husband. He said, 'You had better try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound', so I bought six bottles, and by taking it I am not troubled as I was. I am gaining strength and getting fleshy. My female troubles have vanished and I have never felt so well. The Liver Pills are the best I ever took. If you think my letter will encourage other sufferers you have my permission to use it as an advertisement."—Mrs. SARAH BLAISE, Box 177, Keeseville, N. Y.

Doing the housework for the average American family is some task, and many women lose their health in so doing. If you, as a housewife, are troubled with backache, irregularities, are easily tired out and irritable, or have other disagreeable ailments caused by some weakness, give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. Let it help you.

Kipling Is Baldwin's Cousin.

The rise of the prime minister, Mr. Baldwin, has caused to be told once more the story of the four daughters of a Wesleyan Methodist minister, Rev. G. B. Macdonald, one of whom became the mother of the new prime minister. Another married Mr. Lockwood Kipling and became the mother of Mr. Rudyard Kipling. A third married Sir Edward Poynter, the late president of the Royal academy, and the fourth married that great artist, Sir Edward Burne-Jones. Their brother, Rev. F. W. Macdonald, won in his time the honor of being president of the Wesleyan Methodist conference. Mr. Baldwin, therefore, has had some distinguished uncles and cousins.—London correspondence in the Christian Century.

A Lady of Distinction

Is recognized by the delicate, fascinating influence of the perfume she uses. A bath with Cuticura Soap and hot water to thoroughly cleanse the pores followed by a dusting with Cuticura Talcum powder usually means a clear, sweet, healthy skin.—Advertisement.

Odd Deep-Sea Creature.

"Old Man of the Sea," long famed, or something extremely like him, has been discovered. A hideous marine monster fish, but with almost a human head, has been captured by the crew of the barque Duque d'Aosta off the Brazilian coast. The creature's head has a well-defined nose, ears and gaping mouth, its general appearance being that of an old man. One spike projects from the monster's forehead. It is probable that early mariners, who told wild tales of having seen mermaids, mermen and demons when in tropic seas, had in reality seen some such rare creature of the ocean depths.

His Way.

"I use long words as seldom as possible in my poetry," stated Tennyson J. Daft, the versatile versificationist. "As a rule they do not rhyme as readily as the shorter ones, and then it takes too much time to look up their spelling in the dictionary."—Kansas City Star.

The Dear Girls.

"My nose is shiny. Lend me your powder rag, Grace." "I have lost it." "Then rub your nose with me."

Weak and Miserable?

Is a lame, aching back keeping you miserable? Are you tortured with sharp, stabbing pains? Feel weak, tired—"all-played-out"? Then look to your kidneys, for these are common signs of kidney weakness. There may be headaches and dizziness, too, with annoying bladder irregularities. Don't risk serious kidney sickness. Help your weakened kidneys with Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

A Minnesota Case

Mrs. August Wollan, Green St., Glenwood, Minn., says: "My kidneys gave me trouble. There was a steady dull ache across my back and it was weak, stiff and sore. Dizziness and headaches were common. My nerves were unstrung. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they rid me of the trouble."

Creameries Plan Chicago Offices

A Chicago office will be opened this month by the Minnesota Co-operative Creameries Association, according to an announcement made this week by A. J. McGuire, general manager. It will be in charge of O. S. Hagen, formerly a Minnesota butter-maker. For several years he was employed by the U. S. Bureau of Markets and recently has been an inspector employed by the Chicago Butter Exchange. He is rated as one of the best butter men in the Central West.

The Chicago office has been opened, according to Mr. McGuire, to meet a growing demand for Minnesota co-operatively made butter on that market.

Shipments of butter to Eastern markets by Minnesota's co-operative creamies are constantly increasing, Mr. McGuire said. During June, 258 cars of butter went through the New York office. As a result of the state association's arrangements for through car shipments, on which the freight rate is considerably lower than on part car shipments, the saving on the month's business was more than $20,000.

MUCH TIMBER LAND IN NORTHERN MINNESOTA OPENED FOR SETTLERS

9,400 Acres Government Land May Be Filed On Sept. 19—Preference to Ex-Service Men

Announcement was made in Crookston last week by Martin Widsten, United States Land Office Register for the Crookston district, that the federal interior department had reported the opening of 9,400 acres of timber lands in the Crookston, Cass Lake and Duluth districts on September 19th, this year. Eligible applicants must file their entry claims in person and the local office will be open for this purpose at nine o'clock on the date and the day following.

The land in this district is widely scattered but the larger portion of it is in Clearwater and Lake of the Woods counties. The land is mostly wooded with pine, the prevailing timber.

Mr. Widsten states that the government will give ex-service men preference rights in filing. The homesteads will be thrown open to filing by exservice men on September 19, but other citizens must wait until December 18th to make an entry on the land then remaining.

It has also been announced that the soldiers and sailors may apply their period in the service, up to two years, on the time required to prove up on their filing. This will enable an exservice homesteader to prove up his claim in seven months.

The land now announced for opening is said to be the last of the government's domain in this district. The land in Clearwater county is a part of the government timber reserve in the southern part. The land to be thrown open for entry is located in Beltrami, Clearwater, Mahnomen, Polk, Koochiching and Cook counties.

HUMANITY'S NEXT MOVE

A modern bard hit the bull's-eye when he observed that "God made the country, and man made the town." In the early triumphs of town life man boisterously claimed that he had improved upon the work of God. But the United States Children's Bureau tells us that they have records showing the death rate of 170 babies out of a thousand born in the poverty-stricken sections of cities, while only 60 deaths occurred among a thousand babies in an ordinary community where poverty was not common to the neighborhood. This leads to the belief that man did not do as good a job as he claims when he made the town. Cumulative derogatory evidence can be piled columns high, adding to the indictment of the "town that man made, by reference to social statistics. On the other hand the chief charge against 't'he country that God made" is that its inhabitants have complained that "it is too lonesome." To overcome this defect in their system new railroads and trolley lines have been constructed, and in the last five years Federal-aid highways have been added to the network of the Nation's roads at a cost of $400,000,000. Before the surface was dry on many of these there were bus lines to accommodate those who were not using their own automobiles to travel back and forth. Automobiles are manufactured so fast in Michigan that the poor jack-rabbit is losing all his prestige as a champion runner and breeder. While residents in the smaller towns still have to go to the "general delivery" for their mail, the farmers are supplied at their door by the R. F. D. The "lonesome" farmer can now pull the telephone receiver off the hook and talk to his son at Harvard or Yale, or to his daughter at Brym Mawr or Vassar, or if the "hopefuls" happen to be in a co-ed at Madison, so much the better because he can reach them both on one call. The radio marvel has also appeared, and father, mother, and the whole family, can stay at home and enjoy the best musical talent, and listen to the best speeches by celebrities from the President of the United States down. In the midst of all these changing events it may be observed that the country that God made hasn't changed a bit. Man has merely improved his utensils, but the country is still what Young, the poet, said about it in his lines:

"No splendid poverty, no smiling care,
No well-bred hate, or servile grandeur, there."

Modern science made it possible for men to make great cities, and men were making a slow, sorry job of the attempt until electrical development came along and furnished transportation, lighting, telephone. And all of these depended on the one thing, Power. "Power" is to have a "moving-day," and those who are watching the processes of the electrical age have discovered that industries are seeking locations in small towns and in the country, for economic reasons. The country is ceasing to be lonesome, and vast multitudes of the city population are eager to follow the economic moving van out into the open spaces where "God made the country."

MORE TAX CUTS DUE TO STATE ROAD PLAN

Many Counties Reducing Road and Bridge Funds Again, While State Pays Main Highway Bills

More than $[illegible]750,000 already cut off road and bridge tax levies by Minnesota counties, townships and cities and villages, since the state took over the trunk highways for maintenance and improvement, counties are slashing road funds further in new tax levies now being made.

Predictions are for a bigger decrease in road taxes this year than last, says a highway bulletin based on reports from many sections of the state. Taxes of $15,882,121 for local road purposes this year were $1,902,357 less than last, and last year the total of $17,784,478 was $870,341 smaller than the $18,660,819 fund the year before, making reductions of $2,778,698 in the first two years under the new highway plan, according to the official figures.

"As a whole the local roads are being improved far more rapidly than before," said C. M. Babcock, state highway commissioner. "The main highways formerly took 80 per cent or four-fifths of the county funds, so with more money available now from the reduced levies the faster improvement is to be expected. As county road work progresses and local roads are improved so that maintenance will be the principal expense, still greater reductions in taxes will follow. The state highway at the agreed $18 average tax on motor vehicles will be sufficient and it is a matter of obtaining the best results possible by anticipating receipts of state funds.'

State highway officials are said to be fully reconciled to the 1923 legislative failure of the state highway bond plan. With general taxes higher than ever before, many would have blamed the highway bonds for the rise, they reasoned, although positive that the bonds would have made no difference in taxes but on the contrary would have given the public the use of highway betterments earlier and at an actual cash saving.

RED RIVER OHIO POOL IS ASSURED

Plans for Potato Campaign in Valley Counties Made at Halstad Meeting

The campaign to organize the Minnesota industry on the commodity or California plan, using the Sapiro contract, moved ahead tremendously last week. At a meeting at Halstad, in Norman county, 175 growers from all sections of the Red River Valley, met with S. G. Rubinow, state campaign manager, for a general conference.

After the plan had been fully explained, those present were satisfied that a general pool for Red River Ohios could be formed to meet the demand between the marketing of the early and the late crop. After many leaders had signed the contract, plans were made for a campaign to begin at once in Norman county. Elias Steenerson, one of the largest growers in the valley, acted as presiding officer at the Halstad meeting.

Those interested in the potato campaign considered the Halstad meeting crucial, so far as the state campaign is concerned, as it is realized that without strong support in the Valley counties, the move to form a new sales agency could not succeed, as it is in that section that the bulk of the potatoes in the state are grown.

Thus far in the campaign, organization work has been in the nature of a test of sentiment among growers, and has been confined to counties outside the Valley. More than 700 contracts have been signed, with an aggregate acreage of 10,000.

The state organization committee, originally a body of 25 prominent growers, bankers, and business men, has been enlarged to include at least one representative from each of the 46 counties in which organization work will be conducted. The movement is going forward with the active support of all farm organizations.

A man may find a woman's eyes beautiful and never know the exact color of them.

WAR HITS PITTSBURGH PLUS

Minnesota and Three Oother States Band Against Steel Price.

Chicago—Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin have formed a permanent organization to combat the Pittsburgh plus practise of marketing steel. Committees have been named by the governors of the four states and have submitted reports of their surveys.

One immediate effect of the war, if it proves successful, will be the erection of a $40,000,000 steel plant at Hamomnd, Ind., by the Jones & Laughlin Steel company. A plant site of 1,200 acres has been purchased and construction will begin as soon as the Pittsburgh plus system is abolished.

JAIL TERM FACES ANDERSON

Indictments Already Returned on Larceny and Extortion Charges.

New York—New York officials, bitterly castigated by William H. Anderson, dry leader, for their part in prosecuting charges of grand larceny, forgery and extortion, preferred against him, are prepared to push the case rapidly to trial, they said.

Anderson, state superintendent of the Antisaloon league, can go to trial within 24 hours if he wants to, Assistant District Attorney Ferdinand Pecora declared. Anderson pleaded not guilty to three indictments, two charging grand larceny and one forgery, in connection with his handling of funds of the league, amounting to $24,700. Two additional indictments, charging extortion are expected next week.

EAST ASKING EXTRA SESSION

Massachusetts Representative Joins Brookhart to Get President to Act.

Washington—The conservative east is joining with the west in a formidable coalition to force an extra session of congress.

Following the demand of Senator Smith Woldman Brookhart (rep., Iowa) for an immediate extra session to enact legislation to aid the farmers who have been hard hit by the sagging wheat market, Representative Treadway (rep., Mass.), issued a statement calling upon Preisdent Harding to issue a call convening congress at once to take up measures which he declares are vitaly necessary to avert a coal famine this winter.

REPORT OF FINANCIAL STATISTICS OF STATE

Government of State Cost $41,823,616 For 1922.—$17.06 Per Capita

The Department of Commerce announces that according to reports made to the Bureau of the Census the cost of government for the state of Minnesota for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, amounted to $41,823,616, which was a per capita cost of $17.06. In 1918 the per capita cost was $8.63, and in 1915, $7.54, the totals for these years being $19,802,430 and $16,557,650 respectively. The per capita costs for 1922 consisted of expenses of general departments, 11.70; payments for interest, $0.42; and for outlays, $4.94. More than $10,000,000 was reported as spent on permanent improvement of highways in 1922.

The total revenue receipts for 1922 were $42,262,517, or $17.24 per capita. For the fiscal year the per capita excess of revenue receipts over governmental costs was, therefore, $0.18.

In Minnesota property and special taxes represented 26.9 per cent of the total revenue for 1922, 35.4 per cent for 1918, and 35.5 per cent for 1915. The increase in the amount of property and special taxes collected was 21.5 per cent from 1915 to 1918, and 35.2 per cent from 1918 to 1922. The per capita property and special taxes for the three specified years were $4.64, $3.66, and $3.15, respectively.

Earnings of general departments, or compensation for services rendered by state officials, represented [illegible] per cent of the total revenue for 1922, 20.9 per cent for 1918, and 17.6 per cent for 1915.

Business and nonbusiness licenses constituted 43.2 per cent of the total revenue for 1922, 30.6 per cent for 1918, and 33.5 per cent for 1915. Receipts from business licenses consist chiefly of taxes exacted from insurance and other incorporated companies, while those from nonbusiness licenses comprise taxes on motor vehicles and amounts paid for hunting and fishing privileges.

The net indebtedness (funded and floating debt less sinking and fund assets) of Minnesota was $7.95 per capita for 1922, $0.61 for 1918, and $1.18 for 1915.

For 1922 the assessed valuation of property in Minnesota subject to ad valorem taxation was $2,353,695,321; the amount of taxes levied was $8,371,057; and the per capita levy, $3.41.

Northwestern Fair To Be Community Affair

The Northwestern Fair to [illegible] at Crookston August 6, 7, 8 and 9 will again be a "community affair" along the same lines as the successful event of last year. A number of farm and town organizations are in charge. The Business and Professional Womens' association of Crookston is staging the pageant; the "Pageant of Progress" which is said to be more spectacular and more pleasing than the huge success they staged last year. The Nels T Wold post of the American Legion has appointed a special committee to arrange a mammoth fireworks display. The pageant is to be given two evenings, Tuesday and Thursday, and the fireworks on Wednesday, the evening between.

The racing and special entertainment features have been well looked after by committees representing various towns and country clubs. Auto push ball, a new feature in automobile sport work, will be a part of each afternoon's program that will afford many thrills.

The agricultural and live stock exhibits promise to be exceptionally good and show a development in agriculture supplementing the grain industry, for which the Red River Valley has long been famous, that will add much to the prestige of this section.

A thoroughbred sow, a thoroughbred boar and a thoroughbred bull will be given away, one each day of the fair, absolutely free and with out any "strings" attached other than that the winner must be on the grounds at the time of awarding—four o'clock in the afternoon—and must agree that the animal won will not be taken out of the Red River valley as they have been donated to the fair to stimulate the live stock industry in the valley.

JOHNSON'S LEAD REACHES 94,846

Complete Returns Give Magnus Johnson 290,165 and Gov. Preus 195,319

Magnus Johnson, chosen United States senator in the special election on the Farmer-Labor ticket, had a plurality of 94,846 votes, according to semi-official returns.

The returns gave Johnson 290,165 votes, as compared to 195,319 for Governor J. A. O. Preus, Republican, and 19,859 for James A. Carley, Democrat. This represents a total of 505,343 votes cast in the election.

Complete returns in Marshall County gave Johnson 3,321 votes, Preus 1,251 and Carley 83. The total number of votes cast in the county was 4655.

Well Prepared

A well to do housekeeper in need of the services of a plumber, telephoned to a nearby establishment for a competent man. Answering the doorbell, she found a typical Irishman.

"Good mornin', ma'am," said he.

"Good morning. Are you the plumber?"

"Oi am."

"Now," she said, "I want you to be very careful in your work as the floors are highly polished." "Sure, now," he answered with a deprecatory smile, "don't worry about me, ma'am. I won't slip. I've got nails in me shoes."

Cause for Complaint

Customer: "Has the red-haired girl left yet?"

Waiter: "Yes, sir."

Cutomer: "I thought so, I found a black hair in the soup today."

Order Changing Boundaries or Consolidating School Districts

Whereas, a petition purporting to be signed by the School Board of Common School District numbered sixty-six of the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, asking that, the land adjacent to the said school district No. 66 which the School Board thereof desires to have set off as and made a part of said School District No. 66 is described as follows:

N½ of Sec. 13, N½ of Sec. 14, N½ of Sec. 15, N½ of Sec. 16, SE¼ of NE¼, Lots 1 and 2, SE¼ of NE¼, Lots 3, 4 and 5, Sec. 17, all in Twp. 158, Range 50, was presented to the County Board of said County at a session thereof held on the 18th day of May, 1923, and Whereas, it was thereupon ordered by said Board that a hearing should be had upon said petition at a session of said Board commencing on the 10th day of July, 1923, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon at the office of the County Auditor in the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County of Marshall and the said petition having come on to be heard at a session of said Board held at the time and place last above mentioned, was publicly read and considered, and the Board having heard the evidence offered in support of and in opposition to such petition and the arguments of all persons interested for or against the same, find as follows:

1st. That said petition is signed by the School Board of Common School District numbered sixty-six, affected by said petition.

2nd. That notice of the time and place, when and where the Board would meet to hear said petition, has been given and service thereof made by mailing copies of such notice to the Clerk of each of such school districts, more than ten days prior to the day of such hearing, and by posting copies of such notice in each of three of the most public places in each school district so affected, more than ten days prior to said day of hearing, and by the publication of such notice once in each week for two successive weeks in the Warren Sheaf, a duly qualified newspaper printed and published in said county.

3rd. That proof of such service has been made and filed in the office of the County Auditor, by the certificate of the County Auditor, who mailed such notice to the Clerk's of such districts, and by the affidavit of Peter Johnson who posted copies of such notice in each of said school districts, and by the affidavit of J. P. Mattson who is the printer and publisher of said newspaper.

Wherefore, it is Ordered and Determined that said petition be granted and that school district No. 66 in said Marshall County be enlarged and that the boundaries of the said school district be changed by adding thereto the N½ of Sec. 13, N½ of Sec. 14, N½ of Sec. 15, N½ of Sec. 16, and N½ of Sec. 17, all in Township 158, Range 50.

Dated this 10th day of July, 1923.

By the County Board of the County of Marshall.

PER H. KULLE.

News of Minnesota

Events of the week throughout the “State of Ten Thousand Lakes” told in brief form

Montevideo—The 12 women's clubs of Montevideo have pledged their support to the guarantors of Montevideo's 1924 chautauqua.

Fergus Falls—The annual picnic and reunion of the Otter Tail County Old Settlers association was held at Battle Lake with more than 4,000 persons attending.

Rochester — Commencement exercises were conducted in the high school here at which 114 country and village eighth grade pupils received diplomas.

Owatonna—The Steele County Federation of Women's clubs will have a picnic and business session at Mineral Springs park, here, July 24. A leader of the state federation will speak.

Owatonna—A freight train on the Rock Island ran over and killed an unidentified laborer at a point in the city just outside the railroad's switching yards.

Willmar—E. T. Sandbo, member of the city council, had a narrow escape from death when his car rolled down a 14 foot embankment on a highway near Green Lake.

Willmar—In addition to expressing their choice for United States senator the voters of Willmar ballotted on proposed bond issue for rebuilding the water works system.

Austin—For the fourth successive time Mower county cakemakers have won first place in the southern district of Minnesota. This year a Mower county team also won first place in the advanced breadmaking class.

Thief River Falls—The flowage of water in the Red Lake river is gradually lessening and hardly enough is going over the dam to furnish power for the city in addition to that required by the flour mill which has prior rights.

Fairmont—Eight hundred persons from St. James, had a picnic in Interlaken park here. Fishing and dancing were the principal amusements. The St. James band and ball team accompanied the delegation.

Fairmont—One hundred delegates from southern Minnesota towns gathered at a banquet to start a movement they hope will result in the routing through southern Minnesota of the new Atlantic-Yellowstone-Pacific trail.

Rochester—Rochester through its oil well, now being drilled is becoming an attraction in southeastern Minnesota. Ever since the drilling started, thousands of local people have visited Bigelow's hill to view operations at the well.

Owatonna—A series of 10 meetings at various points in Steele county is to be conducted next for the discussion of the betterment of public health. Dr. Lockhead of the Minnesota Public Health association will be the principal speaker.

Northrop—Fifteen hundred persons attended the Northrop Co-operative Creamery outing. Northrop business men and members of the Waverly and Westford Farmers' clubs attended, as did delegations from many towns in this section.

Fairmont—Delegations from Sioux Falls, Jackson, Luverne and Fairmont met here to consider ways and means of bringing the new Atlantic-Yellowstone-Pacific highway through southern Minnesota on State Road No. 9. Sioux Falls has raised $38,000 to help put it through.

Luverne—The tax levies for Rock county and the city of Luverne have been made up. The county commissioners have added $10,000 to the interest and sanatorium funds, making the county levy the same as last year, $94,000. The city levy has been cut from $68,000 to $44,362.

Windom—At the annual meeting of the Co-operative Elevator company, held here, a dividend of 7 per cent was declared. Each patron was paid a rebate of 1 per cent on all grain marketed in the last year, and the sum of $3,000 was ordered placed in the company's sinking fund.

Blooming Prairie—Lutheran congregations of Owatonna, Ellendale, and this city conducted joint services and had a picnic here. Approximately 2,500 persons from the three towns and from other Southern Minnesota Lutheran congregations attended.

Windom — Farmyard watering troughs have claimed two little children as victims by drowning in the last few days. On a farm near Wilmont a little year and one-half old son of Henry Sieve fell into the watering trough and was dead when found. Near Springfield, a 2 year old son of Fred C. Bolfany was drowned in a similar manner.

Chisholm—A mowing machine cut both legs off the 2 year old son of E. Nusich, a farmer living five miles north of this city. One leg was cut off half way to the knee, while the other was cut through the ankle joints. According to physicians, the boy will live.

Madison — That several hundred acres of fine grain were destroyed by the hailstorm west and northwest of Madison, is indicated by reports that are being received at local insurance agencies. In most cases the losses are estimated at from 20 to 50 per cent.

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

“AND—DIE!”

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of “Captain Sazarac,” and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he “won” at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. De Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admittedly Jean Lafitte, at his country house.

“And were he to order these young scions of the city's blue blood to holystone his decks, he would have to land in every isle of the Indies to settle the challenges! No, no—sir, Bonaparte is safe from these gentry!”

The two gentlemen smiled. But as they were to part, down the banquette of the rue Chartres came two figures, one supporting the other. A short, dark, ragged man whose gold earrings glistened under filthy locks, struggling to save his basket of cooked crayfish as he steered his companion on.

“Let be—” growled Gorgio, the Catalan. “Come, Jarvis—the Cafe des Refugies for you, man!”

“A ship!” bawled Jarvis. And being much the larger of the two he almost propelled the crayfish seller into the two elegant gentlemen, who stepped aside in disgust to let them pass.

“A ship! A rescue, old buccaneer!”

He lurched to the banquette, and sat there blinking. Old Gorgio hauled in vain at his sleeve. “Come, be up with me!”

But the town's first bohemian continued to fumble at his clothes.

“It was this way they went, Gorgio. I am even now on my way to the police to report of the affair. I shall appeal to the mayor—Rouiffignac is not so dumb as to refuse rescue to a lady!”

“What does he babble of?” inquired Langhorne haughtily.

The painter got to his feet. He was bleeding from a gash across his brows. On his sleeve he laid a crushed and dirty camellia. Then, down the street came Mayor Rouiffignac and Councilor Dominique to see what might be this public scandal. And to them Jarvis suddenly shouted his grievance.

“I was fumbling along the rue St. Peter in the mud, sober as any honest man, save that the moon kept diving past me. And there came a carriage that all but ran me down. The horses stumbled—and a lady screamed. She thrust an arm from the curtains—a white arm, I reached to touch. And a fellow within struck me . . . I got up later—I and my blossom. I swear she had more camellias in her hair! Eh, there—I have told it again! Now laugh, fools!”

“Where did you come upon this man, Monsieur Mudge?” said His Honor.

“Here, as you see—dirty and howling!” returned the merchant.

“Gorgio, take him home, and come to my clerk for a dollar,” frowned the mayor. “It's drunkard's talk.”

“Home?” blustered Jarvis. “A lady seized, spirited away in a galloping chaise through New Orleans' streets—and you say: ‘Home!’ Then romance is dead, sirs! I shall paint a fishwoman's shawl on my lady's head, and sorrow in her eyes. It was not so when Jean Lafitte was here!”

“You have dreamed—” muttered Dominique, watching him covertly. “Come with me, Jarvis.”

“My skinned nose and brow—is that a dream?”

“He has stumbled nightlong about the streets,” said Gorgio sullenly. Between the crayfish seller and the rotund alderman there shot glances of alert understanding. The Catalan stretched his hand to the painter and bent upon him a look of implacable fury.

“Let be!” grunted Jarvis. “Camellias? Let's see? Why, Jean—last night—”

“Silence—fool!” whispered Gorgio. He seized upon the fellow; he bore him along with his bull-necked strength against his back.

“He is utterly drunk,” murmured Dominique. “Come, gentlemen—let us to our morning coffee at Maspero's!” He took the mayor's arm, turning him hurriedly. A block distant the councilor looked back, fiddling with his velvet cuff nervously. The Catalan vagabond was dragging his comrade along.

But none save the alderman saw that the hand of the one-time buccaneer was under Jarvis' arm, that his knife-point pressed there until the coat was torn.

“A word more,” hissed the crayfish seller, “and—die!” Then he whispered: “Sazarac . . . and the English woman? Jean—and the wager he won? Who, then, has a better right to the woman? Home, now!—get your paint pots and paint a poultice on your broken head!”

But Gorgio had to drag the unconscious wastrel up the studio stairs, and there lock him in ere he went to a whispered conference behind a cabbage stack in the French market.

CHAPTER VI

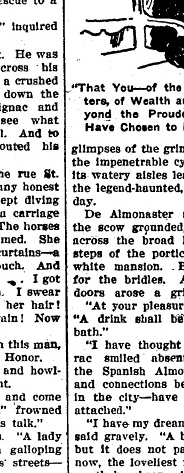
The Mask Is Dropped.

It was after the heat of that same day that two horsemen rode out from a courtyard of the Faubourg St. Marie upon the Tchoupitoulas road.

Count de Almonaster breathed relief when the river willows hid them and the steeds broke into a gallop.

“My blacks are waiting at the ferry,” he murmured; “now, Captain Sazarac, did the plainsmen teach you to ride? Come, then!” And the guest led the way in a cloud of dust. A half-dozen slaves uprose as the two dashed over the levee, dismounted and flung rein to the grooms. Then the scow-boat swung off on the muddy Mississippi, propelled by the naked-backed oarsmen.

Sazarac stood watching the willowed shores. The city was invisible, but on the western bank arose the stately facades of plantation homes among great oaks. Beyond this, glimpses of the grim, gray forest wall, the impenetrable cypress swamp, with its watery aisles leading to Barataria, the legend-haunted, even at this early day.



“That You—of the Spanish Almonasters, of Wealth and Connections Beyond the Proudest in the City—Have Chosen to Idle Unattached—”

De Almonaster stepped ashore as the scow grounded, and led the way across the broad lawns to the high steps of the porticoed gallery of the white mansion. Black boys dashed for the bridles. At the great glass doors arose a grizzled major-domo.

“At your pleasure, sir,” said Raoul. “A drink shall be brought, and the bath.”

“I have thought it strange”—Sazarac smiled absently—“that you—of the Spanish Almonasters, of wealth and connections beyond the proudest in the city—have chosen to idle unattached.”

“I have my dream—” De Almonaster said gravely. “A boy's dream . . . but it does not pass. For six years now, the loveliest face that could stir youth has been with me. It was for that I cruised last year about the Caribbean ports—aimlessly seeking, slowly trying to forget. Ah, well! I am trying to be a practical, sober man—financing the new sugar process!”

With a bow he left the guest. The stranger looked from the great windows upon the gardens. Beyond the narrow fields ran a rutted road, and Jean Lafitte smiled. Up that same road had come the clumsy carts of the smugglers who met the gulf adventurers in the swamp rendezvous and brought the loot of silks and wines and jewels taken from luckless merchantmen on the Spanish Main. By pole-boat from the coast, by carts to the river forest; and then, at dead of night, ferried by other agents across to the warehouses of the city. And to Pierre Lafitte's cloaking smithy on the rue Bourbon came the winking merchants to watch the slaves work the forges while they slyly murmured to the proprietor: “I hear that a ship from Bilboa strangely foundered in Yucatan strait? . . . What, pray, is the price of brocade and silver plate at Monsieur Lafitte's Red house at Grand Terre?”

“Hypocritical dogs!” muttered the master now. “I respect the roughest scoundrel of my own band more than the smug merchants who enriched themselves on our traffic, covertly protecting us while they profited; eager to denounce us when our last ship was driven from the Gulf!”

The liquor decanter was on a highboy of heavy rosewood. The adventurer's melancholy eyes lighted as he examined it, the great four-post bed, the table and the mirrors.

“Loot from the Isle o' Pines! I recall Gambio's sweating blacks poling it from the swamp to be sold to a city factor! It turns up at De Almonaster's and I am entertained with it!”

His laughter had hardly ceased when he joined his host at dinner. Never a more well-appointed guest had Count Raoul greeted than the last sea-rover who sat across the board beyond the golden candelabrum.

Monsieur Sazarac raised a hand. He held a glass before him.

“As to the wine, young sir, I could swear there had been mischief in the Gulf again!”

Raoul laughed ardently: “If ever, sir, one of my uncle's ships, which bring our wine from Bordeaux, had fallen your way, all the wars of Bonaparte had been nothing to the uproar he would have raised!”

“Come—” smiled the guest. “I would forget it all!”

“If we let you—” he signaled the serving men to withdraw. “Now, I am delegated by your own worthy companions for this—the Napoleon plot—is not that adventure enough?”

“More.” Sazarac smiled distantly. “I am done with adventuring. I dream of a plantation in the Indies. In Louisiana, even if again granted amnesty, my presence would be a sore spot. Let any thieving brawl come in the ports, and at once Lafitte's old men are charged with it. They are peaceful men now, scattered on the coast—hunters, raisers of truck, and fishers. Let the dead past lie, my friend. I am an evil legacy . . . and I am forty-two!”

“And yet—the lady of the packet boat!” mused Raoul. “Strange?”

“To her, Sazarac, the gamester—to you, Lafitte, the outlaw. And yet—” the older man stopped, his gaze out the glass doors to the starlight.

“And yet, Monsieur—Sazarac—what if you, of all men, brought Napoleon triumphantly out of exile to the New world? What proud lady of all Louisiana would not be thrilled by the name—Lafitte!”

“Now, that is ridiculous,” frowned the other man. “She—an English Tory—an intrigue to aid Bonaparte win her approval?” He laughed: “Ah, well, a lovely lady for whom I would have fought; and I had to turn aside in silence. I am Lafitte. That is the irony of it—at forty-two, discredited, a fugitive under a mask . . . and she smiled upon the man who is the knave in either role. I did not challenge Colonel Carr,” he concluded pointedly.

“I saw that” Raoul repressed his curious note. “We knew you went to confront him.” He shrugged. “Come, my Captain Jean! I, too, have greatly loved—and lost. Now, this affair is of the sea and men. Would you not listen? You heard last night your old wild fellows chuckling with it!”

The guest stared hard at him. “Napoleon? The devil they would care for him! Tooth and nail on the first merchantman—loot, scurry, spend fistfuls of gold in the ports of South America—and then the yard-arm for them all! Monsieur, the world has shuffled off our gentlemen of fortune!”

“It is the English woman holds you from us,” said Raoul, and then saw the black line deepen on the other's brow. The host bit his lip; and then upon the silence, there came rapid footsteps. A doorman was expostulating at the broad gallery. There was a scuffle, an oath.

“But I shall enter, fellow! Out of the door!”

De Almonaster had arisen by the silver-laden board, with a hasty glance at his guest's impassive face under the golden candelabrum, when the burly grizzled Johanness charged from the hallway. He turned without greeting, staring at Sazarac.

“You Captain Jean! See I have fought for you! A customs guard, I think it was, went down by the cutlass. Nez Coupe, Bohon and I stopped them from the first crossing, but the dragoons are here!”

> “And that he is in reality Jean Lafitte, turned up from the dead.”

GERMAN FOOD CRISIS IS PAST

Ministry of Food Issues Statement That Alarming Scarcity Is Being Relieved.

ASK WARTIME CONTROL

Present Conditions Blamed to Fast Depreciation of Mark—Crops for This Season Are Declared Very Satisfactory.

Berlin.—Obviously with the intention of allaying the growing apprehension among Berliners over the scarcity and high prices of foodstuffs, the ministry of food issued a statement declaring that the apex of the crisis has been reached, that the situation is improving daily, and that within a fortnight the danger will be over.

Except for butter and potatoes, the ministry declares, there is no real lack of foodstuffs in Germany. It explains that the scarcity is due to the general economic position and the rapid fall of the mark which has made it impossible to import goods from abroad to the same extent as formerly.

The grain crop this year is very good, says the statement; the potato crop is satisfactory, and the bread supply is assured.

Numerous shipments of cattle and farm products destined for Berlin are regularly being intercepted en route by speculators and jobbers who are able to dispose of them outside the city on more advantageous terms because of the absence of municipal regulations.

The government's only alternative in the present crisis, according to German commentators, is to reinstate the war system of rationing and price control, or to place at the disposal of the stricken communities sufficient appropriations of foreign currency to enable them to go outside of Germany for their most urgent food supplies and staples.

Greater Berlin at present is receiving only about one-fifth of its normal supply of potatoes. The cabinet decided to request the reichsbank to set aside sufficient funds of foreign currency to cover emergency purchases of bacon and lard abroad.

RATE ADJUSTMENT NEEDED

Fargoans at Rail Hearing Hope for Reductions Soon.

Fargo, N. D.—Hope and expectations that the state railroad commission will lower intrastate freight rates following the hearing held at Bismarck during the last few days at the commission's own suggestion, were expressed by P. E. Peterson, traffic representative of the Fargo Commercial club, following his return to Fargo from the hearing. H. E. Reynolds also represented the Commercial club at the sessions.

“What North Dakota wants is a scientific rate adjustment on a parity with the intrastate rates in Minnesota so that grain can be shipped to North Dakota points without discrimination,” said Mr. Peterson. Representatives from North Dakota asked for a basic rate on grain to all stations where mills are located and to Grand Forks where the state mill is located, so that these mills may distribute their product to the ultimate consumer on a parity with the rates under which twin city, Duluth, and Superior mills distribute their goods.

“An adjustment of rates will also allow distribution on a low cost per unit basis which will enable North Dakota mills to broaden the market for their goods. A mass of data was brought up at the hearing, and briefs are to be submitted within a short time by the parties interested in the case.

U. S. IS FAVORED BY TREATY

Lausanne.—The American and Turkish experts have reached an agreement whereby the United States receives the most favored nation treatment concerning the freedom of the straits for merchantmen and warships. The straits convention will receive all privileges.

Also it will be restricted by all limitations imposed by that convention, which gives each signatory power the right to maintain three warships, not exceeding 10,000 tons each, in the straits. There is a substituting privilege that each power may have as many ships there as are possessed by any country bordering on the Black sea. This includes Russia, which has declined to adhere to the straits treaty.

Pioneer Indian Agent Dead.

Washington.—James H. McLaughlin for 52 years an official of the bureau of Indian affairs, and credited with having numbered among his friends more Indians than any other man, died here recently. McLaughlin was Indian agent at Standing Rock, S. D., at the time of the Custer massacre, and he obtained from Indians who participated an authentic history of the battle. Chiefs John Grass, Red Cloud, Gall, Crow King, Two Bears, Mad Bear, Hump, and Rain-In-The-Face were his friends.

GETTING BACK AT ADVISER

Young Athlete Thought He Had Something Coming, and Decided to Improve the Occasion.

Walter Camp told at a New Haven dinner a story with a moral.

“A brawny young chap,” he said, “came to a doctor to have a broken collar-bone set. While the doctor worked his patient gave him advice in a steady stream.

“ ‘Be careful there,’ he would say. ‘Raise the arm a little higher. Not like that! Heavens, are you losing your head?’

“The doctor was bewildered, but he got the bone set finally and started to bandage the patient up.

“ ‘Tighten on that bandage!’ The stream of counsel began to flow again. ‘Tighten, I tell you! There, that's better. Now a pin! Are you deaf? Are—’

“But the doctor had by this time lost patience.

“ ‘Who and what are you?’ he shouted savagely. ‘Are you drunk, or crazy, or what?’

“ ‘No, doc,’ said the young man with a pleasant smile. ‘I'm just the new 'back of the football team, and that's the way you dope me up with unsolicited advice every blasted game.’ ”

Great Northern Pays

Tribute To Loyal Employes

Justice to the rank and file of earnest and loyal workers in railroad service calls for the correction of an impression created in some quarters by radical leaders that the employes are seeking to destroy the railroads by inefficient and disloyal service. It is true that a comparatively small number of union leaders are seeking to cause a breakdown of the railroads under private operation with a view to bringing about Government ownership. We believe that there remains today among the great majority of railroad workers the same fine sense of loyalty and honor towards the companies that has always characterized their service. That this is particularly true of the Great Northern is evidenced by the following resolutions unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Great Northern Veterans Association on June 22, 1923:

WHEREAS, from various sources it has been learned that the financial affairs of the railroads in the Northwest are insufficient to sustain a satisfactory financial condition; that much of the difficulty is due to high operating costs on account, among other things, of the present high prices of fuel and other supplies, and the rapid increase of late years in taxation, and

WHEREAS, it is most important to the employe to know that

His wages will be fair,

That he will be promptly and properly paid, when due, for services rendered,

That he is secure in his employment,

That his conditions of employment are good,

all of which depend upon the financial stability of the railroad, and

WHEREAS, in some quarters there is propaganda which tends toward the Government ownership of railroads to secure which the railroad employes are exhorted to assist in bringing about that result by hampering the management through failure to give a full day's work for a full day's pay, and

WHEREAS, we believe it would be dishonorable and also destructive to the interests of the employe for him to adopt a policy of not giving a full and efficient day's work for a full day's pay.

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that we condemn all propaganda designed to bring about any such policy as being dishonorable and destructive and that we trust and believe the Great Northern employes will not permit themselves to be led into such an unworthy and futile course.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that for ourselves we believe it is right and also clearly in our interest to support the management in its efforts to provide adequate and prompt service to the public and we pledge ourselves to do our full part in promoting cordial understanding and cooperative spirit in all matters of mutual interest between the Company and its employes.

The spirit of enthusiastic loyalty shown by these Veterans of 25 years or more of service with the Great Northern is the spirit that prevails among its 30,000 employes.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

"MASSA LAFITTE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love. He is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. De Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admittedly Jean Lafitte, at his country house. Lafitte, accused of the abduction of Mademoiselle Lestron, is warned of the approach of a military party seeking to arrest him.

Sazarac arose. The old buccaneer was sheathing his sword. Then he sprang to the great windows and drew the silken curtain. "I see the boat's lights," he grumbled surlily. "The city is in an uproar!"

"Monsieur," the guest turned to De Almonaster. "The thing I feared has come. My name, in some brawl on the water-front—"

"Your name?" shouted Johanness. "No! It is Sazarac they seek! Sazarac, the packet gambler! D—n!—they put the affair straight on Sazarac!"

"What of Sazarac?" Raoul advanced wonderingly.

The old bo'sun laughed, his eyes glittered. He turned to his chief: "If you had told us, Jean, we would have had the woman miles beyond recovery, ere the word was out."

"The woman?" Sazarac eyed him sharply. "Old man, tell me this!"

"First they rout the packets. Then beat out the levee wineshops. All that they knew was that you had vanished with the English woman! Jarvis, the fool, first told the tale, and no one believed him. Then the colonel's wife, then Carr, himself, like a madman to the authorities. She was heard to scream . . . a river guard says there was some commotion on a small boat off the rue Conti, but he thought it was a drunken revel. Dominique hurried me here to warn you—he, alone, knew you were a guest of Monsieur! I did not believe you would be here . . . unless the English woman—"

The sea adventurer had sprung as if to seize the old man's throat.

"She—taken—kidnaped?"

"Why, the tale runs—down to the Barataria swamps! Sazarac was heard to say he would possess her, bond girl or free!" Johanness grinned. "Here is my sword, Jean—before you and the English woman wherever she be!"

De Almonaster was watching a boat's lights on the dark river. "They seek Sazarac, then? Monsieur, can we explain sufficiently where you were last night? I do not question, but you will see the position—"

"Was she not fair game . . . If my captain desired her?" glowered Johanness.

"You will be quiet, Johanness. Stand by to watch the approach." He turned to his host: "This seems some incredible jest. The lady vanished—it appears worthy of John Jarvis' telling—"

Old Johanness gaped upon him unbelievingly. "It would seem you deny knowledge of it! Sazarac was recognized standing before her hotel when all the town was abed. Sazarac swore he would claim her. It seems that not until late afternoon did a servant discover she had been seized in her room. Then came Jarvis' story, piecing the thing out. There is no doubt. The authorities are informed. The consul, the governor, the military!" He stopped, puzzledly watching his chief: "And Sazarac has vanished, you see!"

"There is work for me," muttered Sazarac to his host. "It is enough to say I had no hand in this. Come—throw the doors wide, Johanness!"

"You will have no chance! You will be recognized at once! It is a tale to hang on Jean Lafitte. The swamp, my captain, ere the dragoons come!"

"Monsieur," Sazarac spoke apart to Raoul. "She was to speak of some matter of which her life appeared to be the price. The mystery—Carr's mission. The consul's embarrassment. Who could have taken Miss Lestron?"

"To the swamps without doubt," growled Johanness, "but she cannot be hiddenf rom swamp eyes, Jean, if you seek her—there is the trail!"

Sazarac swept to action. "True! My place is there—and free to follow her!"

De Almonaster grasped his hand as he stepped to the dark. "You will send me word, sir? I am at your service, Monsieur—Sazarac!"

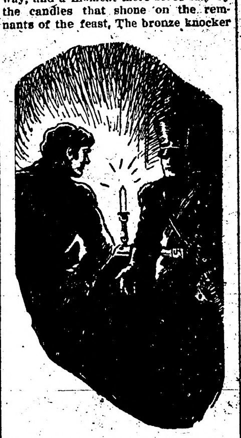
"The game is up for Sazarac! Lafitte, then, threading the secret swamp trails to unknown ends—Lafitte, again the fugitive, driven back to his old haunts as the hounds bay at the fox. Adieu, Monsieur! I am Lafitte."

De Almonaster heard a whispered laugh as the exile mounted a horse which the blacks had hurried from the stables. As he passed the gate, the old yard-man raised a frightened cry and dropped his flambeau.

"Massa Lafitte!"

De Almonaster ground his teeth in fury. "Silence that fellow!" he hissed to the house blacks. "Death to the one of you who whispers a word of this night's matters!"

Silently he ran back, up the rear way, and a moment more stood idly by the candles that shone on the remnants of the feast. The bronze knocker at the door dropped loudly. The frightened servant opened it. A young captain of the American dragoons stepped in hastily. He saluted, embarrassed now at his abruptness.



"I Demand Him, Monsieur!" The Young Officer Was Getting Angry.

"Your pardon, Monsieur de Almonaster—"

"Ah, Captain Roche! Will you enter?"

"Thank you. We are seeking information. A young woman of the party of Colonel Carr of the British mission, waiting to embark for Vera Cruz, has been seized. The clues lead to this west shore, apparently near your place, Monsieur. The British consul threatens to involve the two governments—it is said that the gambler Sazarac, has done this trick . . . and that he is in reality Jean Lafitte, turned up from the dead!"

"Ah—incredible!" murmured De Almonaster. "The famed beauty, Miss Lestron! Possibly I am the one man in New Orleans who has not seen her."

The young officer seemed more embarrassed. "I am sorry to say, sir, that my information was to the effect that this Sazarac was your guest. It is regrettable that I must inquire and search—"

The host bowed: "My compliments to the governor, and say that, tonight, Monsieur de Almonaster Roxas did, indeed, entertain at dinner, Capt. Gaspar Sazarac of the American explorations."

"Ah, but—" gasped the dragoon captain. "It is a villainous affair that is charged to Lafitte, the returned freebooter! Where, Monsieur, is he?"

"Where could he have gone? The river on one side—the swamp on the other. It is lamentable!"

"I demand him, Monsieur!" The young officer was getting angry.

The host concealed a yawn. "I recall that, once, in the old days, the governor of Louisiana demanded him. He sent word to the governor that he would receive the governor at any time the governor wished to call at the Red house on Grand Terre. The governor did not call, I believe."

Captain Roche glanced impatiently at the tall black hats of his dragoons glistening in the torchlights. "Well, then! A cordon of troops on the back plantation roads. The man will be taken before morning!"

"A long day, Monsieur—" murmured De Almonaster.

The officer turned perplexedly. "At least, this! Did this Sazarac resemble Lafitte, the outlaw?"

"They might have been brothers," said Raoul languidly.

"What did he have to say, this bandit?" retorted Captain Roche.

"He praised the woodcock. As for the broiled pompano, it was superlative. And my wines—ah—you should have heard!"

"Perdition, sir!" roared the American captain. "It must be as I have been told—half of old Louisiana was in league with this pirate! The town is laughing, even at this infamy put upon the subject of a friendly power. If Sazarac was Lafitte, they gossip that she probably fled willingly with him!"

"Not to my broiled pompano," mused De Almonaster. "See? He left nothing of it save the bones."

CHAPTER VII

In the Old Haunts.

"Now, see—the captain!" roared old Johanness, shaking the pole support of the palmetto thatch in his truculence. "I—the bo'sun of the Petrel—brought him. You older fellows, there! He commands you in this affair of the English woman. And you"—he leveled savage eyes upon the younger islanders who crowded under the thatch—"does any man speak against me?"

There was no answer. The sweating, motley crew pressed closer to stare at Jean Lafittee.

Gaspar Sazarac—henceforth Jean Lafitte to the gathering members of his old adventuring crew which once had numbered a thousand men at the Red fort on Grand Terre reef sixty miles to the southward—arose and looked at the silent faces.

"First," he said sternly, "I want to know this matter of the muskets stolen from the English ship at the Algiers wharf. It has a bearing upon this mystery of Mademoiselle Lestron, I imagine. The customs officers and the British skipper alike are in an uproar over it. Black Mike—speak!"

"An itch to be looting—that and the drink," muttered Black Michel, uneasily. "An Irisher in the English crew, who once had sailed with Paul Jones, and later taken and impressed into the king's navy—he wished to desert, and meeting up with Bohon, and John Crackley, who had fled from the navy but a week before, he proposed to seize the muskets. It appears they were unloaded by a mischance from the Genaron. The skipper protested to the customs that the arms were destined for the Mexicoes and not for this port. And, while they quarreled of it, our fellows lugged them off. Old Budge was the dock watchman, which made it easy."

"And you, Black Mike—what was your part in it?"

"Oh, nothing! They smuggled the stuff on my lugger, that was all, and cached it on St. Joseph's island. Surely, my captain, you will not reproach me over a little affair like that!"

There was a hoarse laugh. Even the captain smiled.

"Thirty cases of new muskets—three thousands rounds of ball—who knows when we might need them?"

The captain looked out to the tidal bayou, winding through the pathless morass to the Mexican gulf. At the water's edge, past the scraggy, hurricane-riven oaks, lay a dozen trappers' pirogues—slender swift canoes hollowed from a single cypress log. Beyond, at their moorings, swung a trio of red-sailed luggers, with the smoke of their charcoal pots drifting lazily into the air.

"Bohon—" Jean summoned the swarthy Portuguese smuggler from the throng. "Your lugger—twelve men to the sweeps, for there is no air. I must see the deserters from the English ship. The Genaron was to convey the British mission to Vera Cruz. See here—you! Has there been among you of late, any man who whispered against the American occupation of Louisiana? Not openly, as did Captain Lockyer of the Sophia, who, as you older men will remember, landed at our fort with a royal commission for me, and the king's gold for all who would betray New Orleans to Pakenham's fleet?"

There was a shout. "Aye! The British got our answer at Chalmette! Who fought the Yankee bat'ries but our Grand Terre gunners!"

"Even Old Hickory did not question where they got their skill wi' the twenty-four-pounders!"

"Mademoiselle Lestron on the Genaron, and the bark adrift to the passes!"

Plans Tips From Arctic.

Scientists almost unanimously agree that weather conditions throughout the entire world are governed largely by conditions in the arctic zone. With this in view Akbard Ekerold, Arctic explorer, is building a radio station at Jan Mayen island, the tiny cone of an extinct volcano in the Arctic ocean north of Iceland. This, the explorer claims, is the fountainhead of weather conditions.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Coleraine—The St. Paul mine here has resumed operations for the first time since 1914.

Slayton—L. C. Johanson, aged 53, a farmer living near this village, was drowned by falling into the water tank on his farm.

Hibbing—"Gambling in Hibbing must stop," is the ultimatum of Police Chief Frank Haben of this city. The lid has tightened down noticeably, when four arrests were made, according to police investigators.

Rochester—City Attorney Thomas Fraser has given the city council an opinion that a city bank, organized primarily to take care of the city's cash and directly supervised by the city authorities, is neither feasible nor practical.

Minneapolis—The University of Minnesota ranks fifth among the universities of the country in the number of summer session students registered, according to a report received by A. V. Storm, director of the summer session. The registration this season was 3,243.

Rochester—The city council has served notice on the postoffice department that if a sprinkling assessment levied against the lots on which the postoffice stands is not paid by Jan. 1, 1924, the city sprinkling wagons will shut off the water as they pass that way.

Warroad—The school election here may be declared illegal because several of the candidates for the board served as judges and clerks of election. Now the men and women chosen to the board have appealed to the attorney general for an opinion as to the legality of their election.

Two Harbors—A reduction in ore traffic on the Duluth and Iron Range railroad has resulted in a cut from 20 to 12 ore crews operating trains. It is believed the traffic will resume its former strength with the arrival of more boats, at the head of the lakes in a few days.

St. Cloud—Hundreds of children were happy in St. Cloud when four playgrounds sponsored by the Kiwanis club were opened. The club provided the funds for employment of supervisors, who are contributing their services for nominal remuneration. The city purchased the equipment.

Mankato—With the object of taking the memorial business out of the old tombstone clubs and placing it in the art class, and also perfecting the organization of the Memorial Craftsmen of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, the members of the State Memorial Craftsmen of Minnesota will hold a two-day convention here.

Swift Falls—Funeral services were conducted here for J. M. Danelz, founder of Swift Falls. Mr. Danelz died at the age of 84. He established the Swift Falls flour mill, mercantile store, creamery and bank. He also established the Swift Falls postoffice in 1875 and served as postmaster 22 years.

Thief River Falls—Potato tourists from the South and from Minnesota points, being shown Minnesota's new potato crop by the university department of agriculture and the state department of agriculture representatives, found Pennington county farmers shifting their interest in some measure from potatoes to sugar beets.

Hampton—Great Western passenger train No. 7, bound from Kansas City to Minneapolis, was wrecked here when bolts laid on the rails at a curve caused the engine and baggage car to roll over. Only the fact that the train was going slowly, at a rate estimated at between 10 and 15 miles per hour at the time, saved a serious wreck. As it was, no one was injured. Traffic was delayed eight hours.

Austin—Leon Coggins, star high school athlete, will be available for teams at St. Mary's college, Winona, which he will attend next fall. Coggins will bring to St. Mary's an enviable record. He participated in 23 games last season and of the 800 points accounted for half of them. He has won five letters, four of them for basketball and one for baseball.

Bemidji—A decision rendered in district court here by Judge C. W. Stanton holds that, the World war officially ended, so far as the United States was concerned, when the President signed a proclamation to that effect on November 14, 1921. Sheriff Andrew Johnson and the county board could not agree on the date and as it meant 25 cents a day more for each prisoner he had fed from July 2 to November 14, 1921, Johnson brought suit for the difference. The court sustained his contention, and the county was ordered to pay $272.25 claimed by the sheriff.

Hibbing — Harold Gelein, former athletic director at Chisholm high school, has accepted an appointment in the athletic department of the Hibbing high school. He probably will have charge of the junior athletic classes and also will assist in basketball and football coaching.

St. Paul—The annual dinner of the American Bar association, to be held in conjunction with the annual convention in Minneapolis, August 29 to 31, will be held in St. Paul in perpetuation of a time-honored complimentary custom, it was announced by the committee on arrangements.

Austin—Reduction of the force of men working in the Milwaukee shops here has resulted in the discharge of 20 men who were put to work following the shopmen's strike of last year.

Frazee—Because some one released a big snapping turtle in church services in St. John's church, the church offers a $200 reward for the arrest and conviction of the practical joker.

Virginia—More than 170 committees of northern Minnesota are represented by young folks attending the annual Bible summer school at Lake Esquagama.

Willmar—The contract for the construction of a new water plant here has been let for the sum of $14,494. Installation of the pumping equipment will cost $21,370.

Moorhead—Concordia college here faces the prospect of a freshman class of 150 this year, the largest first year class ever enrolled, according to J. A. Aasgard, president. The freshman class of last year numbered 95.

Winona—Miss Sarah S. Lowry of Grinnell, Iowa, has assumed her duties as secretary of the Winona county Child Welfare association. Her appointment by District Judge C. E. Callaghan as county probation officer is expected in a few days.

Pipestone—The Norwegian Lutheran church has extended a call to Rev. S. A. Stenseth of Bend, Ore., to become pastor of the church here. The congregations at Chandler and Ellsborough also have extended a call to Rev. Stenseth.

Fergus Falls—George Neal, a colored employe of a circus was beaten, robbed and thrown from the circus train between this city and Rothsay. He was picked up by a passing freight and brought here. The thief obtained $7.50.

Luverne—Andrew Lein, 45 years old and deaf, was killed near Hills, this county, by a Great Northern train. Lein had been working in a field near by and when it began to rain he sought shelter by making a short cut through the railroad yards, where he was struck by the train.

St. Paul—S. B. Qvale, state prohibition director, planned deportation of Minnesota aliens convicted in United States district court for violation of the Minnesota prohibition law, following a survey of convictions made during the last eight weeks. About 85 per cent of those convicted have been aliens, the records show.

Madison—Charles Orton, a farmer at Augusta, has a broken back and the lower part of his body is paralyzed as the result of an accident in his hayfield. Mr. Orton was stacking hay and was at the top of a high stack when in some manner his feet became entangled in the rope of the stacking machine.

Rochester—Nearly 100 persons attended the second annual automobile tour of the Boys' and Girls' club of Olmsted County Farm Bureau association as inspection was made of the work done by the members of the club in their efforts to raise the standard of livestock in the county and the Northwest.

Pipestone—At a largely attended meeting of lumber dealers here, district groups No. 1 of the Northwestern Lumbermen's association was formed. A. H. Adams of Jasper was chosen president of the group, with P. H. Parsons of Elkton, S. D., E. T. Soderberg of Pipestone and P. H. Larson of Hadley as his assistants.

Mankato—Under a motion passed by the city council, the Mankato Electric Traction company is given one week in which to begin repair of the paving along its right of way on Front street. Failing this the city will proceed to tear up the tracks, according to the resolution, and will pave the full width of the street.

Faribault—Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, czar of baseball, will be one of Faribault's honored guests at the Minnesota state convention of the American Legion, which will be held Aug. 13-15. Announcement of Judge Landis' coming has just been made by Gerald Barron, state commander of the legion.

Willmar—The Commercial club of this city at a special meeting determined to take upon itself the right of accepting the $20,000 of the late Governor A. E. Rice for the use of an armory. The people of Willmar refused by a strong vote to accept the bequest in lieu of the fact that an armory was to be built.

Belle Plaine—Dairying is expected to receive another boost in Scott county Aug. 15, when a "Making Livestock Pay" picnic will be conducted here backed by the Scott county farm bureau, the Belle Plaine creamery association and the Belle Plaine Community club, in June a farm bureau picnic drew an attendance of 8,000.

Owatonna—A peat bog fire, which burned practically all of last week after blazing up and assuming the proportions of a prairie fire, is smoldering and expected to die out within a few days. The original outbreak called farmers near the scene in Lemond township and businessmen from Owatonna to the blaze to prevent wholesale destruction of crops.

Walnut Grove—Three robberies of business places in as many weeks has led the village council to appoint a night watchman. The latest robbery occurred at a poolhall where the thieves pounded off the lock on the safe and obtained $55 in money.

Warroad—Senator A. M. Landby who lives at Swift, in Roseau county suffered several broken ribs and other injuries as the result of being run over by a tractor. While riding on the oil tank of the tractor, which was driven by his son, the senator was shaken off and fell between the wheels

CROWDS GREET FUNERAL TRAIN

Chicago Bows Head in Mourning as Funeral Train Passes Through the City.

WREATHS PRESENTED

Funeral Train Is Delayed by Size of Crowds—Miles Upon Miles of People Pay Homage to Stricken Leader.

St. Joe, Ind.—After being delayed more than 45 minutes by the large crowd at Garret the train bearing the body of President Harding passed through here at 12:35 a. m. and crossed the state line just four and a half miles east of here into Ohio, at 12:40 a. m. At Garrett the American Legion post place da floral wreath on the funeral car.

Chicago.—Father Dearborn bowed his head in mourning as the nation's burden of sorrow reached Chicago.

Through miles upon miles of people the funeral train bearing the body of Warren G. Harding passed scarcely faster than a man might walk.

Fifteen miles from the great railroad terminals the bareheaded throngs grew dense as the funeral cortege drew near to the largest city through which it will pass.

Slowly the black draped engine moved through the great throngs, at times so dense that they were crowded on to the tracks in front of the funeral cortege even as they tried to make a path for the train of mourning.

As the train reached the railroad yards where it transferred from the Chicago & Northwestern road to the Baltimore & Ohio to continue its long journey from the Golden Gate to the capital, traffic was halted for blocks at every street intersection, and the people were massed so densely along the right of way that the train could only creep and at times stopped altogether. It was probably the greatest demonstration for a public man the city has ever had and can only compare with the reception accorded the body of the only other chief executive ever brought here—Abraham Lincoln, in 1865.

Not only did people gather in the hot, dusty railroad yards and stand for hours wedged so tightly together that they could scarcely breathe, but they peered by the hundreds from windows and from the housetops. Every point of vantage had its complement of mourners.

Due to the great crowds that thronged about the funeral train as it reached the more densely populated sections of Iowa and Illinois, the cortege entered Chicago shortly before six o'clock over two and one-half hours behind schedule. It departed at 7:15 o'clock, nearly four hours behind the estimated running time.

WASHINGTON TO HONOR DEAD

Civil and Military Homage of Nation to Be Given at Capital.

Washington.—All the military and civil honors that a great nation, in sorrow and prayer, may bestow upon its dead, will be paid to the memory of President Harding in the funeral ceremonials here.

Preparations for the saddest ceremony in the life of the country since the martyred McKinley was brought here from Buffalo 22 years ago, were completed under the guidance of President Coolidge. The national capitol, draped in mourning, awaited in grief the arrival of the funeral train.

President Coolidge, cabinet members, Chief Justice Taft and Senator Cummins of Iowa, president pro-tem of the senate, will meet the train as it draws into the Union station. Members of the guard of honor—soldiers, sailors, and marines—will remove the body from the car where it has rested since the long trip from San Francisco began, and bear it to a black draped caisson at the entrance to the president's room. As the casket is taken through the station concourse, the marine band will play a funeral dirge.

On the broad plaza outside will be drawn up a squadron of cavalry and a battery of field artillery. As the casket is lifted to the caisson, they will form in line to "present arms" and the marine band will play as the casket is strapped into place.

On signal, the cavalrymen will swing away in column formation, leading the way to the White House. Behind them the caisson and flag-draped casket will follow, with some members of the party that made the fateful journey with the dead chieftain, President Coolidge and other occupants, and the battery of artillery.

Bandits Rob Express Car.

Peoria, Ill.—Four men bound, gagged, and knocked unconscious the express messenger of the Big Four train which left Peoria at 8:30 o'clock, and robbed the safe of five sealed packages and railroad remittances which were destined to Indianapolis. Two men are believed to have jumped into the car as it left the Union station in Peoria. Two more are believed to have got on before the train gained much speed. The messenger was alone in the ca

WANTS TO HELP OTHER WOMEN

Grateful for Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chicago, Ill.—"I am willing to write to any girl or woman who is suffering from the troubles I had before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My back always ached, so I could not go about my housework, and I had other troubles from weakness. I was this way for years, then my sister-in-law took the Vegetable Compound and recommended it to me. In the time I have been taking it and it has done wonders for me. I keep house and am able to do lots of work besides."—Mrs. HELEN SEVCIK, 2711 Thomas St., Chicago, Ill.

Women suffering from female troubles causing backache, irregularities, pains, bearing-down feelings and weakness should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Not only is the worth of this splendid medicine shown by such cases as this, but for nearly fifty years this same sort of experience has been reported by thousands of women. Mrs. Sevcik is willing to write to any girl or woman suffering from such troubles, and answer any questions they may like to ask.

PRESIDENT HARDING DIES SUDDENLY

Stroke of Apoplexy Is Fatal When His Recovery Was Deemed Certain—Mrs. Harding With Him at the End—Whole World Is Shocked.

Washington.—Death claimed Warren G. Harding with shocking suddenness at 7:30 p. m. Thursday at San Francisco. In the midst of apparent recovery he was stricken with apoplexy while Mrs. Harding was reading to him. The end came quickly.

The special train left San Francisco at 7 p. m. Friday, routed directly to the capital by way of Reno, Ogden, Cheyenne, Omaha and Chicago.

The train made no stops en route except those necessary for its operation. The body of the President was borne in the rear car. The car was lighted at night, and at all times two soldiers and two sailors, a part of a naval and military guard of sixteen enlisted men, stood at attention guarding the casket.

The train carried the presidential party as composed during the trip across the country to Alaska, and also General Pershing, Attorney General Daugherty, and Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Remsberg and family, Mrs. Remsberg being a sister of the President.

Untold thousands of American citizens stood with uncovered heads, day and night, as the train passed.

Through Nevada in the hours of daylight and darkness there were mourners at the stations. Utah contributed its thousands the next day. Wyoming's citizens mourned en masse. And so on across the continent. At the cities, especially, large crowds assembled at the stations.

President Harding died of a stroke of apoplexy at 7:30 o'clock Thursday night (10:30 p. m., New York time). His exact age was fifty-seven years and nine months.

The end came suddenly while Mrs. Harding was reading to him from a magazine and after what had been called the best day he had had since the beginning of his illness exactly one week before.

Suddenly it was noticed that the President was shuddering and gasping. Mrs. Harding ran to him, but he was unable to respond to her inquiries. She then ran to the door of the sick room and called to the secret service man there to summon the President's physicians.

When General Sawyer reached the room the President was still alive, but he died almost at once.

Collapse Is Sudden.

In greater detail the facts of the death are related. With Mrs. Harding in the sickroom were two nurses. Due to the seeming improvement in the President's condition, members of his party, including the physicians who had remained in constant call, were confident they could leave the hotel for a few hours' relaxation. Many of them were at dinner.

Mrs. Harding, however, refusing to desert the post, was seated by the bedside, reading to her husband, when at 7:10 o'clock the President suddenly collapsed. His breathing, which had been quick ever since the illness overtook him, suddenly became spasmodic. Mrs. Harding, leaving the nurse to take whatever steps they could in the emergency, ran to the door of the presidential suite.

"Get the doctors," she called, as she ran part way into the almost deserted corridor. A secret service operative was seated about twenty feet down the hall. She hurriedly told the secret service man that the President had had a sudden and seemingly severe relapse, and begged the detective to try to locate Doctor Boone or any of the other physicians.

The secret service man took up the search for the physicians, while Mrs. Harding returned to the bedside. They located Doctor Sawyer at once.

Hoover Arrives Quickly.

Word of the President's sudden turn for the worse spread through the hotel and efforts were launched at once to try to locate the members of his official party.

Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce and one of the closest cabinet members to the President, was the first of the cabinet members to reach the bedside. He hurried into the corridor, already aware that the President's life was ebbing fast, and the door to the suite closed behind him. A short time after he came out. He was completely broken up and could not speak to the newspaper men as they gathered around him on his way down to his own quarters. Tears were running down his cheeks and he seemed to be stunned by grief as he made his way to the elevator.

Mayor James Rolph of San Francisco was the next to arrive, and he, too, after a visit to the death room, was inarticulate.

Official Statement.

It was about twenty minutes from the time Mr. Harding was stricken (7:10 p. m.) until he died (7:30). The circumstance is told briefly in the following formal announcement:

"The President died at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Harding and the two nurses, Miss Ruth Powderly and Miss Sue Drusser, were in the room at the time. Mrs. Harding was reading to the President when utterly without warning a slight shudder passed through his frame, he collapsed, and all recognized that the end had come. A stroke of apoplexy was the cause of his death.

"Within a few moments all of the President's official party had been summoned."

Dr. Boone said later that Miss Powderly looked at the President while Mrs. Harding was reading to him and was struck by a great improvement in the patient's appearance.

"Doesn't he look fine?" she said, turning to Mrs. Harding.

Then the nurse turned back to look at the President to verify her comment. Mrs. Harding looked, too. They saw a shudder pass over the sick man's frame. That marked the stroke that produced death.

The following telegram from the members of the cabinet who are here was immediately sent to Vice President Coolidge, Chief Justice Taft, and those members of the cabinet who were not in San Francisco:

"The President died at 7:30 p. m. from a stroke of cerebral apoplexy. The end came peacefully and without warning.

"DAUGHERTY,
"WORK,
"WALLACE,
"HOOVER."

A Shocking Surprise.

Nothing could have been a more shocking surprise. But an hour earlier General Sawyer had been telling newspaper men that Mr. Harding had had the best day since he became seriously ill the preceding Saturday. He said that the President had definitely entered upon the stage of convalescence and that everything went to show that Mr. Harding was on the road to ultimate recovery.

The members of the official party—those who had accompanied the President and Mrs. Harding—had no warning that the President was in danger. They, like the newspaper men, had been assured that a fatal termination of the President's illness was a thing not to be expected, in view of his apparent improvement—the evident lessening of serious symptoms—in the last 48 hours.

George B. Christian, Jr., secretary to the President and his devoted friend, was in Los Angeles with Mrs. Christian. He had gone there at the President's solicitation to read at a Masonic gathering an address which the President had prepared in the expectation that he would deliver it in person.

The newspaper men had an engagement with General Sawyer for 8 o'clock. He was to tell them then how the President was progressing toward recovery. The bulletin came at 7:30. Instead of informing them that the President's condition continued to improve it gave them the astounding information that he was dead.

Regarding the manner in which Mrs. Harding sustained the shock, an official statement given to the press by Judson D. Welliver of the White House staff, a member of the President's official party, said:

"Mrs. Harding, who from the beginning of the President's illness had expressed complete confidence in his recovery, did not break down. On the other hand, she continued, as from the beginning, the bravest member of the group. When it was realized that the President had actually passed away, she turned to those in the room, whose concern had turned to her, and said: 'I am not going to break down.'"

COOLIDGE WELL EQUIPPED FOR PRESIDENTIAL DUTIES

President Calvin Coolidge is perhaps better equipped by experience to take up his administrative duties in the White House than was any of his predecessors who have been called to that high office by the death of a president.

He has kept throughout the Harding administration closely advised as to the problems of the federal government and has assisted in shaping administration policy by his constant attendance at cabinet meetings.

Although vice presidents usually have no other duties to perform than that of presiding over the senate, casting the deciding vote when that body finds itself in a tie, Mr. Coolidge absented himself from its sessions every Tuesday and Friday to participate in the cabinet deliberations. Thus he became familiar not only with all angles of the major public questions, but also with the reasons actuating the President in his decisions.

CALVIN COOLIDGE NOW IS PRESIDENT

Takes Oath of Office at His Father's Home in Vermont and Hastens to Washington to Assume Duties of Chief Executive.

HIGH SPOTS IN COOLIDGE'S CAREER

Born July 4, 1872, at Plymouth, Vt.

Graduated from Amherst college, 1895. Studied law Northampton, Mass.

Married Grace A. Goodhue, Burlington, Vt., 1905.

Councilman of Northampton; city solicitor; clerk of courts; chairman Republican city committee, 1899 to 1904.

Lieutenant governor Massachusetts, 1916-'17-'18.

Governor of Massachusetts, 1919-'20.

Elected vice president of United States, 1920.

Washington.—President Calvin Coolidge has succeeded Warren G. Harding. He is the thirtieth president of the United States. He is the sixth vice president to succeed through the death of the president. The five other presidents were William Henry Harrison, Taylor, Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley.

Calvin Coolidge took the oath as President of the United States at Plymouth, Vt., at 2:47 a. m. Friday, August 3. The ceremony took place in the living room of the residence of the new President's father, John C. Coolidge. The oath of office was administered by the father, who is a notary public. The text of the presidential oath had been telephoned to Mr. Coolidge at Plymouth from the White House.

Statement by New Chief.

President Coolidge received the news of the death of President Harding and of his own elevation to the presidency at ten minutes before midnight, standard time, Thursday.

Mr. Coolidge received the first news through telegrams from George C. Christian, Jr., secretary to President Harding.

PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE

Mr. Coolidge issued the following statement:

"Reports have reached me, which I fear are correct, that President Harding is gone. The world has lost a great and good man. I mourn his loss. He was my chief and my friend. It will be my purpose to carry out the policies which he has begun for the service of the American people and for meeting their responsibilities wherever they may arise.

"For this purpose, I shall seek the co-operation of all those who have been associated with the President during his term of office. Those who have given their efforts to assist him I wish to remain in office, that they may assist me.

"I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our nation."

The following telegram was sent to Mrs. Harding:

"Plymouth, Vt., Aug. 3, 1923.

"Mrs. Warren G. Harding, San Francisco, Cal.: We offer you our deepest sympathy. May God bless you and keep you.

"CALVIN COOLIDGE,
"GRACE COOLIDGE."

Message Tells of Death.

The telegram announcing the death of the President was as follows:

"Palace hotel, San Francisco, Cali, Aug. 8, 1923.—Mr. Calvin Coolidge, Plymouth, Vt.: The President died, instantaneously and without warning, while conversing with members of his family, at 7:30 p. m. His physicians report that death was apparently due to some brain embolism, probably an apoplexy.

"GEORGE B. CHRISTIAN, JR.,
"Secretary."

This telegram was brought to the Coolidge home at Plymouth Notch by W. A. Perkins of Bridgewater, who owns the telephone line running from Bridgewater to Plymouth. About five minutes later newspaper men arrived in Ludlow.

A drive of thirty miles through the mountains brought them to the Coolidge summer home.

Mr. Coolidge and Mrs. Coolidge had retired about an hour before the death messages were received. Ten minutes after the arrival of the newspaper men Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge came downstairs into the sitting room of the Coolidge home. Mr. Coolidge was dressed in a black sack suit and wore a black necktie. Mrs. Coolidge wore a black and white gown, white shoes and stockings. Mr. Coolidge was very pale and showed deep regret for President Harding's death. He seated himself at a table, while Mrs. Coolidge brought a lamp and read the telegrams he had received.

He then called his assistant secretary, Irwin Geisser, and dictated to him his statement and the telegram to Mrs. Harding.

Mrs. Coolidge Weeps.

In the meantime people were arriving from all directions. Mr. Coolidge, seeing the house becoming crowded, gave orders that an adjoining house be opened for use as press headquarters.

Meanwhile, the new first lady of the land sat weeping softly and exclaiming in sympathy for the bereaved first lady in San Francisco.

"What a blow—what a terrible blow to poor Mrs. Harding," she said. "She had had such a heavy burden, in her own illness, to bear up under—and now this!"

Finally Secretary Geisser returned with the press copies of the statements, and pushing back the old photograph album and the family Bible on the center table, Mrs. Coolidge busied herself with the work of helping distribute them.

The newspaper men had scarcely gotten out of sight when another telegraph messenger arrived with a copy of the presidential oath from Washington. In the same sitting room with its hand-braided rugs, its clutter of venerable colonial furniture, its old wood stove and its family Bible—Calvin Coolidge received the oath of office from his father, and became America's thirtieth president.

Calvin Coolidge is a quiet, taciturn man, known to his friends as "Silent Cal."

For more than twenty years prior to his election as vice president he had been in political life, starting almost immediately after finishing college. His first political office was in the city council of Northampton, Mass., where he had settled. For years he held various offices in that city, including those of city solicitor and mayor; then he was elected to the Massachusetts house of representatives. Later he won a seat in the state senate and was its president.

Coolidge was lieutenant governor of Massachusetts and in 1919 was elected to the governorship in the first campaign won by the Republican party in several years. He was governor for two years. It was during this term he during his term as governor that he first attained nation-wide prominence. This was in connection with the policemen's strike in Boston. He took firm control of the situation, ordered the state guard to patrol the streets, and kept down rioting, taking the stand that law and order must be preserved. The strike was a complete failure.

He was mentioned as a possibility for the presidential nomination prior to the 1920 campaign, but he made a public announcement that he would not consider the nomination. His nomination and election to the vice presidency followed.

Mr. Coolidge comes of a long line of New England ancestors who came to America in 1630, settling near Watertown, Mass. President Coolidge has two sons, Calvin, Jr., and John. Neither he nor his wife has been particularly active socially. A man of simple tastes, a thorough student, a hard worker, he is looked upon by his friends as a clear-headed, solid American. Although shy, he remains unperturbed no matter how exciting the situation may be. The keynote of his nature is dependability. In dress he is conservative, usually the opposite of extravagant, but always immaculate.

In Washington Mr. Coolidge has been ranked as a clear thinker, careful in speech, a fair mixer—as aggressive as any vice president can be.

At the Head of Everything.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale Notice

Whereas, default has occurred in the conditions of that certain mortgage made by Clarence Docken, a single man, mortgagor, to Red Lake Building Association of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagee, dated February 16, 1916, and with a power of sale therein contained, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall county, Minnesota, on the 17th day of February, 1916, at eight-thirty o'clock A. M., in Book 76 of Mortgage Deeds on page 614.

And, whereas, there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage, the sum of Two Hundred Eighty-one and 23-100 dollars ($281.23), and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

Lot Five (5) of Block Ten (10), in the village of Holt in Marshall County, Minnesota, according to the recorded plat thereof on file in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Marshall and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Marshall county, at the west front door of the court house, in the city of Warren, in said county and state, on the 15th day of September, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Two Hundred Eighty one and 23-100 dollars ($281.23), and the interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and fifty dollars attorneys fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

STATE FAIR—DAIRY SHOW FEATURES IN A NUTSHELL

THE Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, September 1 to 8, will be a world's exposition. No Fair in America has ever arranged so many big educational features as will be unfolded before the people of the great Northwest.

First on the program will be the Million Dollar Dairy Exposition, with 1,500 head of the finest dairy cattle on exhibit. Next comes the wonderful agricultural display which has been arranged for this year's State Fair with more than half of the counties of the state competing. Yet, neither of these great exhibits will make a deeper impression on visitors than the club demonstration work by 1,000 boys and girls representing every county in the state.

The work of the women with their exhibits of baking, canning, sewing will be a revelation. The Style Show will be equally as interesting. The big machinery exhibit of 80 acres, will show every kind of modern farm equipment.

There is no limit to what one may learn at the State Fair. The educational program is made up of thousands of exhibits of value. And great as it is, the management has not overlooked the entertainment side. More than $150,000 has been spent for attractions. There will be 17 big circus acts, harness and horse racing, aviation, auto polo, auto racing, fireworks, a midway, and fifteen big bands and orchestras to add to the general gaiety.

It will be the fair of fairs, so be there.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale Notice

Whereas, default has occurred in the conditions of that certain mortgage made by Clarence Docker, a single man, mortgagor, to Red Lake Building Association of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, a corporation, mortgagee, dated February 16, 1916, and with a power of sale therein contained, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall county, Minnesota, on the 17th day of February, 1916, at eight-thirty o'clock A. M., in Book 76 of Mortgage Deeds on page 614.

And, whereas, there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage, the sum of Two Hundred Eighty one and 23-100 dollars ($281.23), and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

Lot Five (5) of Block Ten (10), in the village of Holt in Marshall County, Minnesota, according to the recorded plat thereof on file in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Marshall and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Marshall county, at the west front door of the court house, in the city of Warren, in said county and state, on the [illegible] day of September, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Two Hundred Eighty one and 23-100 dollars ($281.23), and the interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and fifty dollars attorneys fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated July 21, 1923.

STATE FAIR—DAIRY SHOW FEATURES IN A NUTSHELL

THE Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, September 1 to 8, will be a world's exposition. No Fair in America has ever arranged so many big educational features as will be unfolded before the people of the great Northwest.

First on the program will be the Million Dollar Dairy Exposition, with 1,500 head of the finest dairy cattle on exhibit. Next comes the wonderful agricultural display which has been arranged for this year's State Fair with more than half of the counties of the state competing. Yet, neither of these great exhibits will make a deeper impression on visitors than the club demonstration work by 1,000 boys and girls representing every county in the state.

The work of the women with their exhibits of baking, canning, sewing will be a revelation. The Style Show will be equally as interesting. The big machinery exhibit of 80 acres, will show every kind of modern farm equipment.

There is no limit to what one may learn at the State Fair. The educational program is made up of thousands of exhibits of value. And great as it is, the management has not overlooked the entertainment side. More than $150,000 has been spent for attractions. There will be 17 big circus acts, harness and horse racing, aviation, auto polo, auto racing, fireworks, a midway, and fifteen big bands and orchestras to add to the general gaiety.

It will be the fair of fairs, so be there.

Miss Mabel Gregorson of Badger visited Monday and Tuesday with her brother, G. O. Gregorson.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren autoed to Warren Tuesday for an X Ray examination for Mrs. Holmgren's ankle, which has not recovered its strength since her terrible accident a year ago.

Albert Bennes and family autoed to Bemidji Saturday for a short visit with relatives.

Miss Gladys Ellestad returned home Friday from a couple of weeks visit with friends at Thief River Falls.

Bennie Heinze went to Karlstad Saturday where he has employment.

Mrs. Ole Hamernes and two children went to St Hilaire Wednesday to visit her sister.

Ole Johnson, Bertil and Elmer Sollom returned home Saturday night from a tour of the iron range. They report that they enjoyed their vacation.

Ole Reierson took his little boy to Thief River Falls Tuesday to have a weed seed taken out of one of his eyes.

Dewey Perkin of Euclid, Miss Caroline Johnson of Dugdale and several of Mrs. Gilbert Sanoden's brothers, sisters and cousins from the latter place came Saturday night to visit at the Sanoden home and pick blueberries.

Dick Mathison and Mrs. Albert Mathison and children came from McIntosh Saturday night for a Sunday visit with friends and relatives.

Mrs. Ludwig Sagstuen and children left Saturday afternoon for Gatzke, where she will keep house for her father and brothers while her sister works in a cook car.

Mrs. Knauf and little daughter of Thief River Falls visited a few days the past week at the home of her sister, Mrs. Peterson and family.

The Holt creamery made and shipped over a hundred tubs of butter last week, besides what they sold locally. This is fine for the first week in August, when flies are generally bad and pastures are poor.

Prof. Smith the new principal was here Friday night on business. We understand he expects to be here next week to commence the school work.

Hilmer Svenson and Oscar Carlson left Tuesday for Argyle to help with the threshing in that neighborhood.

Clarence Erickson is enjoying a short vacation from his labors in the Marshall County State Bank.

We forgot to mention last week that the school board made a tax levy of $6,000.00, at their last meeting. This is the same amount that was levied last year and makes it sure that school taxes will not be higher next year.

G. O. Gregerson leased the barber shop of O. E. Sovde the first of the week and solicits the patronage of the public. He has set aside Tuesday afternoon and evening for the ladies and children. He will be prepared on that day to bob hair, give shampoos and face massages.

See the field corn on display at the Marshall County State Bank. Fred Voth and John Holst brot in samples last week and Ole Reierson the first of this week. They are worth seeing. Mr. Voth also brot in a sample of soy beans that were grown in the hills of corn.

Engval Johnson and Sidney Enstrom left Saturday for the Red River valley harvest fields.

Births, Deaths, Accidents, Sickness.
